dbt Labs dbt Analytics Engineering Certification Exam Sample Questions (Q11-Q16):

NEW QUESTION # 11

You've defined development, staging, and production targets in your dbt project. You want to prevent accidental execution of destructive model materialization strategies (like drop or truncate) on the production target. How could you achieve this?

- A. Create a separate profiles.yml file for production that disables dangerous materialization strategies.
- B. Write a custom macro that only executes such operations on non-production targets.
- C. Implement a CI/CD process that includes checks to prevent specific dbt commands from running in the production environment
- D. Rely purely on thorough code reviews to prevent execution of these commands in production.

Answer: B,C

Explanation:

A Macros can provide conditional logic for model execution based on environments- C: Automated checks in CI/CD pipelines add a layer of protection. D: Relying solely on code reviews is prone to human error.

NEW QUESTION # 12

You're setting up baseline comparisons with historical data.

a. Which factors are crucial to consider when selecting or generating the baseline dataset?

- A. The baseline needs to align in structure (schemas) with the dbt models being tested.
- B. If using data, the baseline might need sanitization to remove PII.
- C. The data volume in the baseline should be large enough to identify statistical patterns.
- D. The baseline should cover a representative time range relevant to your analysis.

Answer: A,B,D

Explanation:

Each of these directly impacts the validity and usefulness of the baseline for comparison. B, while good, is less universally critical.

NEW QUESTION # 13

A new dataset is loaded into your warehouse as a table daily. You need to create a dbt source for it. Which is the MOST essential element to include in your configuration?

- A. An enabled flag set to 'True'
- B. A source freshness check.
- C. A detailed description in the dbt_project.yml.
- D. Schema and table name.

Answer: D

Explanation:

At a minimum, dbt needs to know where to find this source table. Freshness checks and others are valuable but not strictly required for the source to function.

NEW QUESTION # 14

You're working with a dataset where a column is expected to be updated frequently with newly arriving events. Which type of test would be MOST suitable to check that this process is working as intended?

- A. A test comparing the row count of the source table between different dbt runs.
- B. A custom test comparing timestamps on the column in your dbt model to the current time.
- C. A schema test on the column in the source table.
- D. A generic 'not_null' test on the column.

Answer: B

Explanation:

It focuses on freshness, which is the core concern in this scenario. The other options, while valid, don't target this specific assumption.

NEW QUESTION # 15

You maintain a large dbt project with various reporting models that source data from a set of core business tables. These core tables often include columns with sensitive information. What technique could ensure compliance and maintainability when restricting access to this data?

- A. Create incremental models that directly remove the sensitive columns before reporting models utilize them.
- B. Write complex WHERE clauses in each reporting model to exclude rows containing sensitive data.
- C. Use views to create different projections of the core tables, exposing only the necessary columns.
- D. Apply row-level security within the data warehouse itself for fine-grained control.

Answer: C

Explanation:

Views provide a modular and maintainable way to define access restrictions. This approach centralizes the filtering logic, preventing repeated and potentially inefficient WHERE clauses across models.
