NEW QUESTION # 35

A financial institution is implementing Adobe Real-Time CDP and has critical data coming from multiple sources, raising data security concerns. What is the recommended Adobe Experience Platform feature to use to ensure this sensitive data, such as customer's financial details and transactional data, is handled properly?

- A. Query Service
- B. Data Usage Labels and Policies
- C. Profile API
- D. Privacy Request

Answer: B

Explanation:

For a financial institution, managing sensitive information like account numbers or transaction history requires a rigorous governance strategy. The recommended feature to ensure this data is handled according to security and compliance standards is Data Usage Labels and Policies.

This feature allows the institution to categorize data using Labels at the schema and field level. For instance, sensitive financial fields can be labeled with "PII" (Personally Identifiable Information) or "S1" (Highly Sensitive). Once labeled, Data Usage Policies are created to define the "contracts" of how that data can be used. If a policy is set to restrict "S1" data from being exported to third-party cloud storage, the platform will automatically enforce this at the point of activation.

This "Governance by Design" approach ensures that even as data moves from multiple sources into the unified Real-Time Customer Profile, it carries its security context with it. Option A (Profile API) and Option B (Query Service) are tools for accessing and analyzing data but do not provide inherent security or governance protections. Option D (Privacy Request) is used to satisfy individual consumer rights like "the right to be forgotten" but does not manage the ongoing architectural security of the data. Data Usage Labels and Policies provide the proactive, automated enforcement needed to mitigate the risk of data misuse or accidental exposure in highly regulated industries like finance.
