NEW QUESTION # 28

An organization is implementing a new training curriculum to ensure employee competency in specific areas.

The long-term goal is to turn the curriculum into an internal certification program that will be used as part of career development and succession planning. A Senior IT Technician files a grievance with the union, claiming that the entire program is unfair since the technician is at the highest level of the position. Which of the following scenarios could result in an unfair labor practice?

- A. Continuing to develop the program during the grievance proceedings
- B. Telling the employee they would not benefit from the program due to their level
- C. Transferring the employee to a lower-level position to allow for career progression
- D. Postponing the development of the program during the grievance proceedings

Answer: B

Explanation:

Telling an employee that they would not benefit due to their level could discourage participation or retaliate against unionized workers, potentially violating the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA) protections against coercive practices.
