問題 #100

You finished registering a FortiGate device. After traffic starts to flow through FortiGate, you notice that only some of the logs expected are being received on FortiAnalyzer.

What could be the reason for the logs not arriving on FortiAnalyzer?

- A. This FortiGate is part of an HA cluster but it is the secondary device.
- B. This FortiGate model is not fully supported.
- C. FortiGate was added to the wrong ADOM type.
- D. FortiGate does not have logging configured correctly.

答案： D

解題說明：

This FortiGate is part of an HA (High Availability) cluster, but it is a secondary device. In an HA configuration, typically only the primary device is responsible for sending logs to FortiAnalyzer, while the secondary device may not send logs unless the primary device fails.

問題 #101

For which two purposes would you use the command set log checksum? (Choose two.)

- A. To prevent log modification or tampering
- B. To help protect against man-in-the-middle attacks during log upload from FortiAnalyzer to an SFTP server
- C. To send an identical set of logs to a second logging server
- D. To encrypt log communications

答案： A,B

解題說明：

To prevent log modification or tampering: The set log-checksum command with options like md5 or sha1 calculates a checksum value for the log data. This checksum acts as a digital signature, allowing FortiAnalyzer to verify the integrity of the logs and detect any unauthorized modifications.

To protect log data from man-in-the-middle attacks: By using checksums, FortiAnalyzer can ensure that the logs received have not been altered in transit during a man-in-the-middle attack. If the checksum of the received logs doesn't match the expected value, it indicates potential tampering.
