NEW QUESTION # 72

How can admins manually control groupings of notable events?

- A. Aggregation policies.
- B. notable_event_grouping.conf
- C. Multi-KPI alerts.
- D. Correlation searches.

Answer: A

Explanation:

In Splunk IT Service Intelligence (ITSI), administrators can manually control the grouping of notable events using aggregation policies. Aggregation policies allow for the definition of criteria based on which notable events are grouped together. This includes configuring rules based on event fields, severity, source, or other event attributes. Through these policies, administrators can tailor the event grouping logic to meet the specific needs of their environment, ensuring that related events are grouped in a manner that facilitates efficient analysis and response. This feature is crucial for managing the volume of events and focusing on the most critical issues by effectively organizing related events into manageable groups.

Which of the following are deployment recommendations for ITSI? (Choose all that apply.)

- A. Deployments often require an increase of hardware resources above base Splunk requirements.
- B. Deployments may increase the number of required indexers based on the number of KPI searches.
- C. Deployments require a dedicated ITSI search head.
- D. Deployments should use fastest possible disk arrays for indexers.

Answer: A,B,C

Explanation:

Explanation

You might need to increase the hardware specifications of your own Enterprise Security deployment above the minimum hardware requirements depending on your environment.

The Splunk platform uses indexers to scale horizontally. The number of indexers required in an Enterprise Security deployment varies based on the data volume, data type, retention requirements, search type, and search concurrency.

- A. SplunkWeb (8405), SplunkD (8519), and HTTP Collector (8628)
- B. SplunkWeb (8089), SplunkD (8088), and HTTP Collector (8000)
- C. SplunkWeb (8000), SplunkD (8089), and HTTP Collector (8088)
- D. SplunkWeb (8088), SplunkD (8089), and HTTP Collector (8000)

Answer: C

Reference:

A, B, and C are correct answers because ITSI deployments often require more hardware resources than base Splunk requirements due to the high volume of data ingestion and processing. ITSI deployments also require a dedicated search head that runs the ITSI app and handles all ITSI-related searches and dashboards. ITSI deployments may also increase the number of required indexers based on the number and frequency of KPI searches, which can generate a large amount of summary data.
