NEW QUESTION # 1197

You would expect to see which of the following in a person with histrionic personality disorder?

- A. being verbally belligerent and humiliating to those perceived as a threat
- B. being cold, callous and insensitive to others
- C. being overly dramatic, seeking attention and tending to exaggerate
- D. being inattentive and indifferent

Answer: C

Explanation:

Histrionic Personality Disorder (HPD) is one of several personality disorders listed in the American Psychiatric Association's Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders (DSM). It is characterized by a pattern of excessive emotionality and attention-seeking behaviors. Individuals with HPD often act in a very emotional and dramatic manner, which may be perceived as being shallow or not genuinely felt.

The key characteristics of someone with HPD include a constant desire for approval and reassurance. They often engage in behavior that is overly dramatic, theatrical, and excessively expressive. This is done in order to be the center of attention, a place where they feel most comfortable. Their self-esteem depends heavily on the approval of others, and they may feel uncomfortable when they are not in the limelight.

In response to the question, the most accurate description of behavior associated with histrionic personality disorder is "being overly dramatic, seeking attention and tending to exaggerate." This encapsulates the essence of the disorder, which revolves around a pervasive pattern of dramatic, exaggerated expressions of emotion and attention-seeking behaviors. These behaviors include but are not limited to, speaking dramatically with strong opinions, but with few facts or details to support them; being easily influenced by others or circumstances; considering relationships to be more intimate than they actually are; and displaying inappropriate sexually seductive or provocative behavior.

The other options listed, such as "being cold, callous, and insensitive to others," "being inattentive and indifferent," and "being verbally belligerent and humiliating to those perceived as a threat," do not typically describe the behaviors associated with HPD. Individuals with HPD might actually be highly sensitive to criticism and disapproval, which contradicts the notion of being cold or callous. Their need for attention and validation often results in a very engaged rather than indifferent demeanor. While they can be competitive for attention, their methods are usually not aggressive or belligerent but rather flamboyant and dramatic.

It is crucial to understand that while these behaviors can be disruptive and challenging, they stem from deep-seated fears of rejection and low self-worth. As with any personality disorder, individuals with HPD often benefit from psychotherapy, which can help them learn more productive ways of thinking and behaving, ultimately leading to more stable and satisfying relationships.

NEW QUESTION # 1198

A PMHNP considers the impact of biological, psychological, and sociological/environmental factors as contributors to each patient's current mental health. Which considerations are made in each section of this three-part framework known as the biopsychosocial model?

- A. Predisposing, perpetuating, and sociological/environmental factors
- B. Mental health diagnoses, treatment fidelity, and environmental supports
- C. Mental health diagnoses, physical health, and resource availability
- D. Mental health diagnoses, physical health, and abuse history

Answer: A

Explanation:

The biopsychosocial model is commonly used to determine the state of an individual's mental health. It reflects the understanding that mental illness is rarely simply one variable but rather a combination of the three factors, which are biological, psychological, and environmental influences.

Each section of the biopsychosocial framework requires further questioning on predisposing, perpetuating, and protective factors that are unique to the individual. Working through this process allows the PMHNP to develop a thorough understanding of the factors that contribute to each client's mental health challenges.
