NEW QUESTION # 376

A company currently produces a major component and is considering purchasing the component from a foreign supplier. Assuming they were to purchase from the foreign supplier, which of the following factors would most likely impact the domestic manufacturing operations?

- A. Transportation cost from the supplier
- B. Direct cost of the component
- C. Supplier lead time fluctuations
- D. Accuracy of supplier forecasting

Answer: C

Explanation:

When considering purchasing components from a foreign supplier, supplier lead time fluctuations can significantly impact domestic manufacturing operations due to the following reasons:

- * Supply Chain Disruption: Variability in lead times can disrupt the production schedule, leading to delays and increased downtime.
- * Inventory Management: Inconsistent lead times make it challenging to maintain optimal inventory levels, potentially resulting in stockouts or excess inventory.
- * Cost Implications: Fluctuations can lead to increased costs due to expedited shipping or last-minute adjustments in production schedules.
- * Quality Control: Variability in lead times can complicate quality assurance processes, making it harder to maintain consistent product quality.
