NEW QUESTION # 28
You are asked to connect an IP phone and a user computer using the same interface on an EX Series switch.
The traffic from the computer does not use a VLAN tag, whereas the traffic from the IP phone uses a VLAN tag.
Which feature enables the interface to receive both types of traffic?

- A. DHCP snooping
- B. voice VLAN
- C. MAC limiting
- D. native VLAN

Answer: B

Explanation:
Explanation
The feature that enables an interface on an EX Series switch to receive both untagged traffic (from the computer) and tagged traffic (from the IP phone) is the voice VLAN12.
The voice VLAN feature in EX-series switches enables access ports to accept both data (untagged) and voice (tagged) traffic and separate that traffic into different VLANs12. This allows the switch to differentiate between voice and data traffic, ensuring that voice traffic can be treated with a higher priority12. Therefore, option D is correct.

NEW QUESTION # 30
You want to use filter-based forwarding (FBF) on your Internet peering router to load-balance traffic to two directly connected ISPs based on the source address. Which two statements are correct in this scenario? (Choose two.)

- A. RIB groups are used to hide routes in the inet. 0 routing table.
- B. FBF uses the forwarding routing instance type.
- C. FBF uses the no-forwarding routing instance type.
- D. RIB groups are used to copy routes from the inet. 0 routing table.

Answer: B,D

Explanation:
Option B is correct. Filter-based forwarding (FBF), also known as Policy Based Routing (PBR), uses the forwarding routing instance type.
Option C is correct. Routing Information Base (RIB) groups are used to copy routes from one routing table to another. In the context of FBF, RIB groups can be used to copy routes from the inet.0 routing table.
Option A is incorrect. FBF does not use the no-forwarding routing instance type. Option D is incorrect. RIB groups are not used to hide routes in the inet.0 routing table. They are used to share or copy routes between different routing tables.
