This is the reason why we need to recognize the importance of getting the test AD0-E605 certification.

Adobe Real-Time CDP Business Practitioner Professional Sample Questions (Q19-Q24):

NEW QUESTION # 19

A data scientist is working with Adobe Real-Time CDP and wants to ensure better monitoring of data streams. Which feature in the Adobe Experience Platform User Interface would the data scientist use to monitor the data ingestion process in real time?

- A. Datastream Activity
- B. Streaming end-to-end Monitoring
- C. Data Quality and Compliance Dashboard
- D. Dataset Management Dashboard

Answer: B

Explanation:

For a data scientist or engineer looking to monitor the flow of data from ingestion through to the profile store, Streaming end-to-end Monitoring (Option B) is the specialized UI feature within Adobe Experience Platform. This capability provides a visual representation of data health and throughput as it moves through the platform's various stages.

Unlike standard dataset views, end-to-end monitoring allows users to track high-velocity data streams and identify where potential bottlenecks or failures are occurring—whether at the source, during XDM validation, or during the final upsert into the Real-Time Customer Profile. This real-time visibility is critical for ensuring that behavioral data is correctly fueling segmentation and activation use cases.

Option A (Data Quality and Compliance) is focused on governance and attribute completeness over time rather than real-time stream monitoring. Option C (Dataset Management) provides a static view of stored data files and record counts but lacks the temporal "flow" perspective needed for real-time analysis. Option D (Datastream Activity) refers to the Edge Network configuration logs, which monitor data reaching the Edge, but Streaming end-to-end Monitoring is the comprehensive choice for viewing the data's journey through the core Adobe Experience Platform services.

NEW QUESTION # 20

What actions can alerts in Adobe RT-CDP trigger? (Select two.)

- A. Warn administrators of quota breaches.
- B. Activate segments without approval.
- C. Notify users of data ingestion errors.
- D. Automatically resolve identity conflicts.

Answer: A,C

NEW QUESTION # 21

A Marketing Specialist in a travel agency firm has imported an externally created audience which contained a "Destination.City" attribute into Adobe Experience Platform. The Marketing Specialist then wanted to use this attribute in segment builder to combine with other Event attributes to create a more complex audience but is facing challenges with building the new audience. What is the reason for the issue the Marketing Specialist is facing?

- A. External audience attributes first need to be linked with the schema fields before using in segment builder.
- B. External audience attributes can only be used in segmentation APIs and not segment builder
- C. External audience attributes are non-durable and not linked to the unified profile for segmentation
- D. External audience attributes can only be combined with Profile attributes and not Event attributes.

Answer: C

Explanation:

When an audience is imported into Adobe Experience Platform from an external source (like a CSV upload or a partner destination), it is treated as an External Audience. Unlike audiences natively generated within AEP, external audiences are "non-durable" by default regarding their metadata. This means that while the platform knows which profiles belong to that audience, the specific attributes associated with that external list (such as "Destination.City") are not automatically ingested into the Real-Time Customer Profile as permanent attributes.

The "challenges" mentioned occur because the Segment Builder requires attributes to be part of an XDM schema to perform complex cross-attribute filtering. Because the "Destination.City" attribute exists only within the context of the external audience membership and is not linked to the unified profile schema, it cannot be used in a join with behavioral Event attributes.

Option A is incorrect because external audiences are limited in combination with any other dynamic criteria in the visual builder unless they are first converted into profile attributes. Option D is a potential workaround but does not explain the reason for the immediate failure. Option C is incorrect as the UI does support basic external audience selection. The fundamental issue is that external attributes are transient and not part of the XDM Profile store, thus they lack the relational "glue" required for complex segmentation logic involving time-series events.

NEW QUESTION # 22

A retail organization is introducing an e-commerce channel and would like to integrate the customer's browsing and online purchase data into the Real-Time Customer Profile. The data structure of the clickstream event being captured is as follows:

□ The architect decides to separate 'pages.visited' and 'purchases' into different schemas.

Which Experience Data Model XDM schema classes would be used to model the browsing activity and the purchase activity?

- A. XDM ExperienceEvent for both browsing and purchase data
- B. XDM ExperienceEvent for browsing data and XDM Product (or purchase)
- C. XDM ExperienceEvent for browsing data and XDM Individual Profile for purchase data
- D. XDM Individual Profile for browsing data and XDM ExperienceEvent for purchase data

Answer: A

Explanation:

In Adobe Real-Time Customer Data Platform, the classification of data into Experience Data Model (XDM) classes depends on the nature of the information—specifically whether it describes a state or an event. Both "browsing activity" (page visits) and "purchase activity" are fundamentally behavioral, time-series events that occur at a specific point in time.

The XDM ExperienceEvent class is purpose-built to capture these "point-in-time" occurrences. For browsing data, each page view is an event with a timestamp and specific attributes (like page name). Similarly, a purchase is a discrete transaction that happens at a particular moment. Modeling both as ExperienceEvents allows the Real-Time Customer Profile to maintain a chronological timeline of a customer's journey, which is essential for calculating journey-based metrics and triggering real-time orchestration.

Option A and B are incorrect because the XDM Individual Profile class is intended for persistent, slow-changing attributes (such as name, email, or loyalty tier) rather than transactional or behavioral data. Storing purchase data in a profile schema would fail to capture the historical context of multiple transactions. Option D is incorrect because "XDM Product" is typically a lookup schema used to provide descriptive details about a SKU, not to record the act of purchasing itself. By utilizing the ExperienceEvent class for both activities, the architect ensures that the data is optimized for the Segmentation Service, allowing for complex queries like "customers who viewed a product but did not purchase it within the last 24 hours."

NEW QUESTION # 23

What is an example of on-site personalization using Adobe RT-CDP?

- A. Displaying a personalized homepage banner based on recent browsing behavior.
- B. Running a batch activation workflow for ad platforms.
- C. Sending an email campaign to a segment of customers.
- D. Exporting a customer profile report to an external system.

Answer: A
