CWNP Certified Wireless Design Professional Sample Questions (Q280-Q285):

NEW QUESTION # 280

When viewing channel utilization information from a protocol analyzer, if high channel utilization is occurring, what should you ensure does not exist?

Response:

- A. High levels of workload
- B. High frames per second
- C. A high percentage of low PHY rates
- D. An RF signal generator causing an RF DoS

Answer: C

NEW QUESTION # 281

What are the two types of WLAN discovery/scanning?

Response:

- A. Active
- B. Automatic
- C. Hidden
- D. Passive
- E. Manual
- F. Probe

Answer: A,D

NEW QUESTION # 282

As you plan a WLAN upgrade, you have assessed the network requirements and data signatures of your applications. One of the popular applications used on your network requires high bandwidth and low to medium Wi-Fi loss, but can tolerate moderate latency and jitter.

What application matches this description?

- A. Skype chat
- B. Email
- C. Voice
- D. Video-on-demand

Answer: B

NEW QUESTION # 283

After designing and deploying a WLAN infrastructure, you realized the CCI is causing poor performance in the 2.4 GHz band.

Primarily, you've designed the WLAN for 5 GHz and 2.4 GHz as a best effort. You found out that the implementers didn't follow your guidelines when configuring the WLAN infrastructure. What can you do to minimize as much as possible the CCI impact in the 2.4 GHz band?

- A. Add more APs to the infrastructure
- B. Use all channels available in the 2.4 GHz band
- C. Increase the transmit power on all APs
- D. Turn-off 2.4 GHz radios on some APs

Answer: D

Explanation:

Comprehensive and Detailed Explanation:

Co-Channel Interference (CCI) in the 2.4 GHz band can significantly degrade WLAN performance due to the limited number of non-overlapping channels available. If the WLAN was primarily designed for 5 GHz, the 2.4 GHz band serves as a secondary or best-effort option. In such cases, turning off 2.4 GHz radios on some APs can reduce CCI by minimizing overlapping coverage areas, thereby improving overall network performance.
