NEW QUESTION # 253
Currently, autonomous-driving technology is encountering bottlenecks. Some "hard-case" scenarios cannot be solved by single-vehicle intelligence alone and urgently need Intelligent-Connected solutions. Which scenario below is not one of these "hard cases"?

- A. Single-vehicle intelligence cannot recognize white vehicles
- B. Inability to promptly detect traffic conditions in blind spots
- C. Single-vehicle decision-making can only be based on its own incomplete information
- D. Lack of perception of abnormal traffic beyond line of sight

Answer: A

Explanation:
Hard cases usually arise from perception and information limitations of stand-alone vehicles (e.g., beyond line-of-sight perception, blind spots, and limited self-only information). These require cooperation via vehicle- road/cloud collaboration. Failure to recognize white vehicles is more of a sensor and algorithm robustness issue that can be improved on the vehicle side itself and is not a typical scenario requiring V2X/Intelligent- Connected enhancement.
