NEW QUESTION # 22

An unlisted company operates in a niche market, exploring the west coast of Africa for new oil reservoirs.

The oil exploration program has been successful in recent years and it now has a substantial amount of oil reserves with a high level of certainty of being recoverable. Under financial reporting regulations, oil still in the ground is not recognised as an asset until it is extracted.

The expense of the exploration program has used up all the company's available cash resources.

The company has decided to list on a stock market and raise funds through an initial public offering to finance its drilling program.

Which of the following valuation methods is the most appropriate to use in calculating an initial listing price for this company?

- A. Framings valuation using the ratio of a multinational oil exploration company
- B. Market capitalisation.
- C. Net asset valuation based on book values.
- D. Discounted cash flow valuation

Answer: D

Explanation:

Market cap isn't available yet, book-value net asset valuation ignores the substantial unrecognised oil reserves, and current earnings don't reflect the value of those reserves. DCF based on forecast cash flows from the proven reserves is the most appropriate for an IPO price here.
