NEW QUESTION # 37
During the configuration of a new custom field, after it's been saved but before the field has been published, you realize that you set the wrong field type. What is the next step you should take to resolve the issue?

- A. Clear and recreate the field with the same field name and the intended field type
- B. Delete the field and create a new field with the same name and the intended field type
- C. Mark the field as Hidden, and create a new field with a slightly different name and the intended field type
- D. Change the field type by selecting the intended type in the dropdown and Save

Answer: B

Explanation:
Once a custom field has been saved, its field type cannot be changed-even if the field has not yet been published. The correct approach is to delete the incorrect field and create a new one with the intended type, optionally using the same name to maintain naming consistency. Clearing or hiding the field does not solve the issue, and the system does not allow type changes via the UI once saved. This approach is standard in SAP Ariba field management to avoid data integrity issues.

NEW QUESTION # 38
A migration is performed for a Greenfield deployment to production, and the status of the Template configuration type indicates it failed. What actions do you take to make the failed template(s) available in production?

- A. Import the missing data in production and then import the template in production
- B. The template must always be rebuilt in production
- C. Request SAP intervention
- D. Import the template in production

Answer: A

Explanation:
When template migration fails in Greenfield deployment, it often means required master data like Flex Master Data or enumerations are missing in Production. The recommended resolution is to manually load the missing master data into Production first, then manually import the failed templates via the Production import tools. Requesting SAP intervention is unnecessary as this is a customer-side activity.
Importing templates without missing data causes repeated failures, and rebuilding templates is not always required if proper data exists.
