NEW QUESTION # 104
Eric works as a system administrator at ABC organization and previously granted several users with access privileges to the organizations systems with unlimited permissions. These privileged users could prospectively misuse their rights unintentionally, maliciously, or could be deceived by attackers that could trick them to perform malicious activities. Which of the following guidelines would help incident handlers eradicate insider attacks by privileged users?

- A. Do not control the access to administrator ano privileged users
- B. Do not enable default administrative accounts to ensure accountability
- C. Do not allow administrators to use unique accounts during the installation process
- D. Do not use encryption methods to prevent, administrators and privileged users from accessing backup tapes and sensitive information

Answer: B

Explanation:
Not enabling default administrative accounts is crucial to ensuring accountability and minimizing the risk of insider attacks by privileged users. By disabling or renaming default accounts, organizations can better track the actions performed by individual administrators, reducing the risk of unauthorized or malicious activities going unnoticed. This practice is part of a broader approach to privilege management that includes limiting permissions to the minimum necessary and monitoring the use of administrative privileges.
References:The ECIH v3 program emphasizes the importance of managing privileged access and ensuring accountability among users with elevated permissions to protect against insider threats and misuse of administrative rights.
