NEW QUESTION # 39

When organizations initially start consuming public cloud services, they often use VPNs over the internet to connect their on-premises applications to the public cloud infrastructure. In which two cases are other connectivities a better fit? (Choose two)

- A. Latency sensitive multimedia streaming
- B. cost sensitive business applications
- C. migration to transit gateway
- D. high availability
- E. desktop-as-a-service using VDI

Answer: A,E

Explanation:

Latency sensitive multimedia streaming requires low and consistent latency as well as high bandwidth to deliver smooth, high-quality streams. VPNs over the public internet often suffer from variable latency and packet loss, making private or dedicated connections (like Direct Connect, ExpressRoute, or Software-Defined Cloud Interconnection) more suitable.

Desktop-as-a-service (DaaS) using Virtual Desktop Infrastructure (VDI) also demands low latency and high reliability to provide a responsive user experience. VPNs over the internet can introduce jitter and delays that degrade the performance of remote desktops, so private or dedicated cloud connectivity options are preferred.
