Google Cloud Digital Leader Sample Questions (Q317-Q322):

NEW QUESTION # 317

One of your customers used to have a private data center. While within their data center itself, they were consuming some Google services via API calls and other public, well-known addresses published by Google. Now they're evacuating their private data center and are moving to Google Cloud. Could they improve some of their existing architecture with respect to security?

- A. Enable Private Google Access so that they can remove public IP addresses.
- B. Use Shared VPCs with the Google Cloud organization so that you can directly use services using only private IPs.
- C. Use private addresses only. No additional configuration is required. All Google services will be accessible within Google Cloud on private addresses.
- D. Use VPC Peering with the Google Cloud organization so that you can directly use services using only private IPs.

Answer: A

Explanation:

"VM instances that only have internal IP addresses (no external IP addresses) can use Private Google Access.

They can reach the external IP addresses of Google APIs and services. If you disable Private Google Access, the VM instances can no longer reach Google APIs and services; they can only send traffic within the VPC network."
