CWNP Certified Wireless Analysis Professional Sample Questions (Q30-Q35):

NEW QUESTION # 30

You are troubleshooting a client that is experiencing slow WLAN performance. As part of the troubleshooting activity, you start a packet capture on your laptop close to the client device. While analyzing the packets, you suspect that you have not captured all packets transmitted by the client. By analyzing the trace file, how can you confirm if you have missing packets?

- A. Protocol Analyzers show the number of missing packets in their statistics view
- B. The missing packets will be shown as CRC errored packets
- C. Retransmission are an indication of missing packets
- D. Look for gaps in the sequence number in MAC headers.

Answer: D

Explanation:
One way to confirm if you have missing packets in your packet capture is to look for gaps in the sequence number in MAC headers. The sequence number is a 12-bit field in the MAC header that is used to identify and order data frames within a traffic stream. The sequence number is incremented by one for each new data frame transmitted by a STA, except for retransmissions, fragments, and control frames. The sequence number can range from 0 to 4095, and then wraps around to 0. If you see a jump or a gap in the sequence number between two consecutive data frames from the same STA, it means that you have missed some packets in between. The other options are not correct, as they do not confirm if you have missing packets in your packet capture. CRC errored packets are packets that have been corrupted during transmission and have failed the error detection check. Protocol analyzers may show the number of CRC errored packets in their statistics view, but not the number of missing packets. Retransmissions are an indication of packet loss or collision, but not necessarily of missing packets in your capture. Which one of the following should be the first step when troubleshooting a WLAN issue?

- A. Define the problem
- B. Identify probable causes
- C. Perform an initial WLAN scan and see if any obvious issues stand out
- D. Identify capture locations

Answer: A

Explanation:
The first step in any troubleshooting process is to define the problem.
