- A. 0
- B. 1
- C. 2
- D. depends on the make of the peer gateway

Answer: A

Explanation:

Main Mode in IKEv1 uses six packets for negotiation¹. Main Mode is the default mode for IKE phase I, which establishes a secure channel between the peers. Main Mode performs the following steps²:

The peers exchange their security policies and agree on a common set of parameters.

The peers generate a shared secret key using the Diffie-Hellman algorithm.

The peers authenticate each other using pre-shared keys, digital signatures, or public key encryption. Main Mode is partially encrypted, from the point at which the shared DH key is known to both peers². Main Mode provides more security than Aggressive Mode, which uses only three packets for negotiation, but is faster and simpler².
