NEW QUESTION # 172

What are the characteristics of DAS? (Select all that apply)

- A. Used for file storage services.

- B. Connects to servers without using network devices.
- C. Used for block storage services.
- D. Directly connects to servers.

Answer: B,C,D

Explanation:

Direct-Attached Storage (DAS) is a traditional storage architecture where storage devices are connected directly to a host server. Huawei documentation defines the following key characteristics:

Direct Connection (Option C): DAS connects to the server via internal or external interfaces such as SATA, SAS, or SCSI, rather than through a storage network.

No Network Devices (Option A): Because it is a 1-to-1 connection, it does not require Fibre Channel switches or Ethernet switches to facilitate the link between the host and the storage. This makes it simple and cost-effective for small-scale deployments.

Block Storage Services (Option B): Like a SAN, DAS provides block-level access. The server's operating system manages the file system (NTFS, EXT4, etc.) directly on the provided blocks.

While a server attached to DAS can share its files over a network (becoming a file server), the DAS itself is not a "File Storage Service" (Option D). In Huawei's hierarchy, file services are the domain of NAS (Network Attached Storage), which provides shared access to files via protocols like CIFS/SMB or NFS.
