NEW QUESTION # 23

(In the CloudFabric Solution, a PoD or site is a network fault domain managed by the SDN controller. It contains one or more spine-leaf architectures.)

- A. TRUE
- B. FALSE

Answer: A

Explanation:

In Huawei CloudFabric architecture, a PoD (Point of Delivery) or site is defined as an independent network fault domain under the management of the SDN controller (such as iMaster NCE-Fabric). This design is fundamental for large-scale data center deployments, ensuring clear fault isolation, simplified management, and scalable expansion.

Each PoD typically consists of one or more spine-leaf fabric architectures, which provide high-bandwidth, low-latency, and horizontally scalable connectivity. Within a PoD, all devices operate under a unified control and policy framework delivered by the controller. If a failure occurs within a PoD, it is contained and does not affect other PoDs, thereby improving overall network reliability.

Huawei recommends this modular design approach to support multi-data center deployments, disaster recovery, and service expansion. Multiple PoDs can be interconnected to form a larger cloud fabric, while still maintaining independent fault domains. Therefore, the statement accurately reflects Huawei CloudFabric design principles and is TRUE.
