ISACA Advanced in AI Security Management (AAISM) Exam Sample

Questions (Q215-Q220):

NEW QUESTION # 215
Which approach should an organization prioritize to effectively verify the security of its AI models?

- A. Using standard penetration testing methods
- B. Automating vulnerability identification
- C. Testing team competencies in IT threat mitigation
- D. Developing a testing strategy including AI-specific threat modeling and adversarial attack simulations

Answer: D

Explanation:
The AAISM standard explicitly states that traditional penetration tests alone are insufficient for AI systems.
Effective AI security testing requires:
* AI-specific threat modeling (e.g., data poisoning, prompt injection, model theft)
* Adversarial attack simulations (white-box, black-box, gradient-based attacks)
* Evaluation of robustness and manipulation resistance
Option B captures these requirements precisely.
Options A, C, and D do not address AI-specific attack vectors.

NEW QUESTION # 216
Within an incident handling process, which of the following would BEST help restore end user trust with an AI system?

- A. AI is being used to monitor incident detection and alerts
- B. The AI model prioritizes incidents based on business impact
- C. The AI model's outputs are validated by team members
- D. Remediation of the AI system based on lessons learned

Answer: C

Explanation:
Restoring end user trust during incident handling requires visible, immediate assurance that system outcomes are safe and appropriate. AAISM prescribes human oversight and approval gates for high-risk AI decisions, with human validation of outputs before use as a primary control to maintain trust while technical remediation is underway. Prioritization (A) and monitoring (B) aid operations but do not directly rebuild user confidence in outcomes. Post-incident improvements (D) are essential for long-term assurance but do not provide the immediate trust restoration that supervised, human-validated outputs deliver.

NEW QUESTION # 217
Which of the following is the MOST likely cause of model drift?

- A. Perfect knowledge
- B. Membership inference
- C. Model stealing
- D. Data poisoning

Answer: D

Explanation:
Model drift occurs when the statistical properties of input data and/or the relationship between features and outcomes change over time, causing degraded model performance. The AAISM guidance classifies data- centric causes (distribution shift, concept drift, and contamination) as the primary drivers and highlights that malicious contamination of training or incremental learning data (data poisoning) is a direct, high- likelihood driver of observable drift in production because it changes the effective data-generating process the model learns from. In contrast:
* Perfect knowledge is an attacker capability descriptor, not a drift cause.
* Membership inference targets privacy of the training set and does not inherently shift data distributions.

* Model stealing targets IP/confidentiality; it does not change the victim model's data distribution or decision boundary in situ.

NEW QUESTION # 218
Personal data used to train AI systems can BEST be protected by:

- A. Anonymizing personal data
- B. Hashing personal data
- C. Erasing personal data after training
- D. Ensuring the quality of personal data

Answer: A

Explanation:
AAISM guidance on privacy-preserving AI highlights anonymization as the most effective means of protecting personal data used in training. By irreversibly removing or masking identifiable attributes, anonymization ensures that training data cannot be linked back to individuals, thereby meeting key privacy obligations under laws such as GDPR. Erasing data after training may limit exposure but does not protect it during the training process. Ensuring data quality improves accuracy but does not mitigate privacy risk. Hashing protects data integrity but does not guarantee anonymity, as hashes can sometimes be reversed or correlated. Therefore, anonymization is the recommended control for protecting personal data in AI training.

NEW QUESTION # 219
An organization has implemented a natural language processing model to respond to customer questions when personnel are not available. A pre-implementation security assessment revealed attackers could access sensitive company data through a chat interface injection attack. Which of the following is the BEST way to prevent this attack?

- A. Ensuring continuous monitoring and data tagging
- B. Conducting regular information security audits
- C. Implementing input validation and templates
- D. Manually reviewing AI model outputs

Answer: C

Explanation:
To prevent prompt/interface injection, AAISM prioritizes preventive technical controls at the boundary: input validation/sanitization, structured templates/system prompts, allow/deny lists, and context isolation. These measures constrain user-supplied content and block adversarial instructions from being interpreted as system directives. Monitoring (A) and audits (D) are detective/assurance activities; manual output review (B) is compensating but less scalable and does not prevent injection.
