Avaya Aura Communication Applications Implement Sample Questions (Q44-Q49):

NEW QUESTION # 44

When deploying a Survivable Communication Manager (CM), which statement about the Server ID value is true?

- A. Every CM server in the network needs to be assigned a unique server ID, but both servers in a duplex pair must have the same Server ID.
- B. Every CM server in the network needs to be assigned a unique Server ID including servers in a duplex pair.
- C. The Server ID of a Survivable CM needs to match the server ID of the Main CM. The Server IDs must be an even/odd pair (N, N+1).

- D. The Server ID is a value found in the license file.

Answer: A

Explanation:

The Server ID is a fundamental identifier within the Avaya Aura Communication Manager architecture, used to manage licensing and system identity across the network.

Duplex Pair Logic: A duplex pair consists of an active and a standby processor (often referred to as the "A" and "B" servers) working together to provide high availability. Because they act as a single logical unit to the network and the license file, they must share the exact same Server ID.

Global Uniqueness: Outside of a specific duplex pair, every other CM instance (whether it is a standalone main server or a Survivable CM/LSP) must be assigned a unique Server ID. This ensures that the license manager (WebLM) can accurately track entitlement usage across distributed systems.

NEW QUESTION # 45

Which statement about the Avaya Aura Media Server (AAMS) associated with the Avaya Aura Web Gateway (AAWG) is true?

- A. When a call is established using Avaya Spaces Calling, the AAMS processes the media until the Avaya Communication Manager shuffles the call.
- B. For a call established from Avaya Spaces Calling, the AAMS processes the media for the duration of the call.
- C. When Avaya Spaces Calling is used by a User to make a call to another User, the media path is always direct, bypassing the AAMS.
- D. The AAMS is only used for calls to Avaya Spaces Calling from outside the corporate network.

Answer: B

Explanation:

When integrating the Avaya Aura Web Gateway (AAWG) to support Avaya Spaces Calling, the Avaya Aura Media Server (AAMS) plays a persistent role in the media path.

WebRTC Translation: Avaya Spaces Calling utilizes WebRTC technology. Because standard telephony components (like Avaya Communication Manager or traditional deskphones) often use different codecs or signaling methods than web-based clients, the AAMS acts as the media anchor.

Media Processing: Unlike traditional SIP-to-SIP calls where media can often be "shuffled" (Direct IP-to-IP) to save bandwidth, calls involving the Web Gateway generally require the AAMS to stay in the loop to manage the transcoding and media relay between the WebRTC world and the Aura core.

Duration: The AAMS remains in the signaling and media path for the entire length of the call to ensure stability and compatibility between the web-based caller and the telephony destination.
