NEW QUESTION # 37

Which type of network topology entirely shuts down if there is a break in the main cable?

- A. Star
- B. Ring
- C. Bus
- D. Wireless

Answer: C

Explanation:

In a bus topology, all devices share a single central cable (backbone). If this cable fails, the entire network becomes inoperable. This topology is simple and cost-effective but lacks redundancy.

NEW QUESTION # 38

What is the function of the Internet Protocol (IP) in the Transmission Control Protocol (TCP)/Internet Protocol (IP) stack?

- A. To direct data packets between devices
- B. To provide a user interface for network applications
- C. To ensure data packets are delivered in order
- D. To encrypt data for secure transmission

Answer: A

Explanation:

The Internet Protocol (IP) is responsible for addressing and routing data packets across networks. Its primary function is to direct packets from the source device to the destination device, ensuring that each packet contains the correct source and destination IP addresses. IP determines the path through interconnected networks, but it does not guarantee reliable delivery or order—that responsibility lies with TCP.

Option A (Encrypt data): Incorrect, encryption is handled by protocols such as TLS/SSL, not IP.

Option B (User interface): Incorrect, the user interface is provided by application-level protocols, not IP.

Option D (Ensure order): Incorrect, ensuring correct order and reliability is the role of TCP, not IP.

Thus, IP is the protocol that directs data packets between devices.

Option A: Service-oriented jobs are growing, but IT leadership is impacted most by specialized skills demand.

Option C: Automation reduces some routine tasks but increases the need for specialized technical expertise.
