問題 #134

Which of the following would be an information security managers PRIMARY challenge when deploying a bring your own device (BYOD) mobile program in an enterprise?

- A. Configuration management
- B. End user acceptance
- C. Inconsistent device security
- D. Mobile application control

答案：C

解題說明：

Inconsistent device security is the primary challenge for an information security manager when deploying a bring your own device (BYOD) mobile program in an enterprise because it increases the risk of data breaches and compromises. A BYOD mobile program allows employees to use their personal devices, such as smartphones, tablets, or laptops, to access the organization's network, applications, and data. However, personal devices may have different operating systems, versions, configurations, and security settings than the organization's standard devices. Moreover, personal devices may not be updated regularly, may have unauthorized or malicious apps installed, or may not have adequate protection against malware or theft.

Inconsistent device security makes it difficult for the information security manager to enforce and monitor the security policies and controls across all devices, as well as to ensure compliance with the regulatory requirements for data privacy and security.

Therefore, inconsistent device security is the correct answer.

- B. preemployment screening.
- C. close monitoring of users' access patterns.

問題 #138

An organization implemented a number of technical and administrative controls to mitigate risk associated with ransomware. Which of the following is MOST important to present to senior management when reporting on the performance of this initiative?

- A. The cost and associated risk reduction
- B. The number and severity of ransomware incidents
- C. Benchmarks of industry peers impacted by ransomware
- D. The total cost of the investment

答案: A

解題說明:

According to the CISM Review Manual, the most important metric to present to senior management when reporting on the performance of a risk mitigation initiative is the cost and associated risk reduction, as it demonstrates the value and effectiveness of the initiative in terms of reducing the likelihood and impact of the risk. The other metrics may be useful for comparison or analysis, but they do not directly measure the performance of the initiative.
