NEW QUESTION # 127
Which data load sequence should be followed when loading data into Sales agreement?

- A. Sales Agreement
- B. Sales Agreement Product
- C. Sales Agreement Product schedule

Answer: A,B,C

Explanation:
n: A sales agreement is a contract between a manufacturer and a customer that specifies the terms and conditions of a long-term sales relationship. A sales agreement consists of a sales agreement record and one or more sales agreement products. A sales agreement product is a line item that represents a product or a product category that the customer agrees to purchase over a period of time. A sales agreement product schedule is a subcomponent of a sales agreement product that defines the quantity and revenue expectations for each time period within the sales agreement term. To load data into sales agreements, you must follow the correct data load sequence to ensure data integrity and avoid errors. The data load sequence is as follows:
First, load the sales agreement records, which contain the basic information about the sales agreement, such as name, account, start date, end date, status, and so on.
Second, load the sales agreement products, which are related to the sales agreement records by the Sales Agreement ID field. Each sales agreement product must have a valid product or product category, name, initial planned quantity, and price book entry.
Third, load the sales agreement product schedules, which are related to the sales agreement products by the Sales Agreement Product ID field. Each sales agreement product schedule must have a valid period, quantity, and revenue.
