NEW QUESTION # 393

Which of the following is a function of a dynamic analysis tool?

- A. Execute programs step-by-step in order to reproduce failures and find corresponding defects
- B. Provide support for release of baselines consisting of configuration items
- C. Provide support for traceability of tests, test results and incidents to source documents
- D. Monitor the allocation, use and de-allocation of memory during run-time of a program

Answer: D

Explanation:

A dynamic analysis tool is a tool that performs analysis of a software product based on its behavior during execution. A dynamic analysis tool can monitor various aspects of a program's run-time performance, such as memory usage, CPU load, response time, or resource leaks. A dynamic analysis tool can monitor the allocation, use and de-allocation of memory during run-time of a program, which can help detect defects such as memory leaks, buffer overflows, or memory corruption. A dynamic analysis tool cannot provide support for traceability of tests, test results and incidents to source documents, as this is a function of a test management tool. A dynamic analysis tool cannot execute programs step-by-step in order to reproduce failures and find corresponding defects, as this is a function of a debugging tool. A dynamic analysis tool cannot provide support for release of baselines consisting of configuration items, as this is a function of a configuration management tool. NEW QUESTION # 394

Which ONE of the following tools would be MOST SUITABLE for facilitating the creation of test cases, test data, and test procedures?

- A. DevOps tools, as they support the automated build process and CI/CD.
- B. Test design and implementation tools are specifically designed for creating test cases, test data, and test procedures.
- C. Test execution and coverage tools facilitate the automated execution of tests and the measurement of test coverage.
- D. Static testing tools as they assist the tester in conducting reviews and static analysis.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Comprehensive and Detailed In-Depth Explanation: The correct tool for creating test cases, test data, and test procedures is a test design and implementation tool (A).

* (B) is incorrect as static testing tools focus on code analysis, not test case creation.

* (C) is incorrect because DevOps tools manage automation pipelines, not test design.

* (D) is incorrect because test execution tools focus on running tests rather than designing them.

Test design tools help optimize test coverage, reduce redundancy, and improve efficiency.

- B. It enables the versioning of the test elements.

NEW QUESTION # 396

The following incident report that was generated during test of a web application.

What would you suggest as the most important report improvement?

Defect detected date: 15 8.2010

Defect detected by: Joe Smith

Test level System test

Test case: Area 5/TC 98

Build version: 2011-16.2

Defect description After having filled out all required fields in screen 1, t click ENTER to continue to screen 2 Nothing happens, no system response at all.

- A. Add an impact analysis
- B. Add the time stamp when the incident happened
- C. Add information about which web browser was used
- D. Add information about which developer should fix the bug

Answer: C

Explanation:

The most important report improvement for the given incident report would be to add information about which web browser was used when the defect was detected. This information is relevant for reproducing and debugging the defect, as different web browsers may have different behaviors or compatibility issues with the web application. The other options are less important or irrelevant for the incident report. The developer who should fix the bug can be assigned by the project manager or the defect tracking system, not by the tester who reports the defect. The time stamp when the incident happened is not very useful, as it does not indicate the cause or the frequency of the defect. The impact analysis is not part of the incident report, but rather of the risk assessment or prioritization process. NEW QUESTION # 397

Which of the following should be included in a test status report?

I. Estimation details

II. Total number of open and closed defects

III Actual effort spent

IV. Defect reports

V. Number of executed, failed, blocked tests

- A. II, III.V
- B. I. II. IV
- C. III.V
- D. II, III

Answer: A

Explanation:

The following should be included in a test status report: total number of open and closed defects, actual effort spent, and number of executed, failed, and blocked tests. A test status report is a document that provides information on the results and status of testing activities for a given period or phase. A test status report should include information that is relevant, accurate, and timely for the intended audience and purpose. Some of the information that should be included in a test status report are: total number of open and closed defects, which can indicate the defect trend and defect density of the software product; actual effort spent, which can indicate the productivity and efficiency of the testing process; number of executed, failed, and blocked tests, which can indicate the test progress and test coverage of the software product. The following should not be included in a test status report: estimation details, defect reports, and impact analysis. Estimation details are not part of a test status report, but rather part of a test plan or a test estimation document. Estimation details provide information on the expected time, resources, and costs for testing activities, not on the actual results or status of testing activities. Defect reports are not part of a test status report, but rather separate documents that provide detailed information on individual defects found during testing. Defect reports include information such as defect description, defect severity, defect priority, defect status, defect resolution, etc.

Defect reports can be referenced or summarized in a test status report, but not included in full. Impact analysis is not part of a test status report, but rather part of a risk assessment or prioritization process. Impact analysis provides information on the potential effects or consequences of a change or a defect on the software product or project. Impact analysis can be used to evaluate the amount or scope of testing to be performed, but not to report the results or status of testing activities.
