NEW QUESTION # 78
Which cybersecurity type does NOT focus on protecting connected devices?

- A. Cloud security
- B. Network security
- C. Application security
- D. IoT security

Answer: C

Explanation:
Among the listed cybersecurity types, Application security does not primarily focus on protecting connected devices. Application security concentrates on safeguarding software applications by addressing vulnerabilities in code, ensuring secure development practices, and protecting against threats like SQL injection or cross-site scripting. While applications may run on devices, the focus is on the software layer, not the hardware or connectivity. In contrast, Cloud security protects data, applications, and infrastructure in cloud environments, often including connected devices accessing cloud services. Network security focuses on securing network infrastructure, including devices connected to the network, by implementing firewalls, intrusion detection, and secure protocols. IoT security specifically targets the protection of Internet of Things devices, such as sensors and smart devices, ensuring their connectivity and data integrity. Application security's software-centric approach makes it distinct from the device-focused protection provided by Cloud, Network, and IoT security, aligning with SAP's comprehensive cybersecurity framework for diverse system components.

NEW QUESTION # 79
Which of the following user types are excluded from some general password-related rules, such as password validity or initial password? Note: There are 2 correct answers to this question.

- A. System
- B. Communication
- C. Service
- D. Dialog

Answer: A,C

Explanation:
In SAP S/4HANA, Service and System user types are excluded from some general password-related rules, such as password validity periods or initial password requirements. Service Users, often used for web-based access or anonymous logons, do not require frequent password changes or initial password setups, as their access is typically managed via certificates or system configurations, reducing administrative overhead.

System Users, designed for background processes like batch jobs, also bypass these rules, as they are not intended for human interaction and often use system-generated or fixed credentials for automated tasks.

Dialog Users, used for interactive human access, are subject to strict password policies, including validity and initial password requirements, to ensure security. Communication Users, used for machine-to-machine interactions, may have specific authentication mechanisms but are generally subject to password policies unless otherwise configured. Excluding Service and System Users from these rules supports operational efficiency while maintaining security, as their non-interactive nature reduces the need for frequent password management.

- C. One decentralized role administrator
- D. One user administrator per production system

Explanation:
* Context:Decentralized treble control ensures segregation of duties, minimizing risks of unauthorized access or role misuse.
* Solution Descriptions:
* B: Focuses on separating administrative responsibilities at a system level.
* D: Ensures administrators are assigned to specific application areas, improving focus.
