Oracle Cloud Infrastructure 2025 Multicloud Architect Professional Sample Questions (Q18-Q23):

NEW QUESTION # 18
When configuring Data Guard for Oracle Database@Azure, what network connectivity is required between the primary (in Azure) and the standby (in OCI)?

- A. A VPN connection over the public internet.
- B. A Site-to-Site VPN between the Azure VNet and the OCI VCN.
- C. Oracle Interconnect for Azure combined with FastConnect in the DR OCI region.
- D. A direct connection through Azure ExpressRoute.

Answer: C

Explanation:
Here's why:
The primary database is accessible via the Oracle Interconnect for Azure (which uses FastConnect).

The standby database is in a separate OCI region for DR. To connect to this standby database, you need FastConnect in that DR OCI region.

Therefore, the combination of "Oracle Interconnect for Azure combined with FastConnect in the DR OCI region" provides the necessary network connectivity for Data Guard replication between the primary and standby databases in this scenario.

The other options are incorrect:

A direct connection through only Azure ExpressRoute is insufficient, as the standby is in a different OCI region, not Azure.

A VPN over the public internet is not recommended for Data Guard due to performance and security concerns.

A Site-to-Site VPN between the Azure VNet and the OCI VCN is relevant for connectivity between the application tier (in Azure) and the primary database (accessible through the Interconnect), but not for direct Data Guard replication to a standby in a different OCI region. Data Guard requires direct, high-bandwidth connectivity within the OCI network.

NEW QUESTION # 19

Which networking components are essential for establishing Oracle Interconnect for Azure on the OCI side?

- A. Dynamic Routing Gateway (DRG) and a dedicated virtual circuit.
- B. Virtual Cloud Network (VCN) and Internet Gateway (IGW).
- C. Service Gateway and a private endpoint.
- D. Dynamic Routing Gateway (DRG) and FastConnect.

Answer: D

Explanation:
Here's why:

Dynamic Routing Gateway (DRG): The DRG is the core component for connecting your OCI virtual cloud network (VCN) to networks outside of OCI, including on-premises networks and other cloud providers like Azure. It acts as a highly available, redundant virtual router.

FastConnect: FastConnect provides a dedicated, private connection between your on-premises network or a third-party data center and OCI. This is crucial for establishing high-bandwidth, low-latency connectivity required for Oracle Interconnect for Azure.

Let's look at why the other options are incorrect:

B). Virtual Cloud Network (VCN) and Internet Gateway (IGW): While a VCN is necessary for your OCI resources, the Internet Gateway (IGW) provides internet access, not a dedicated connection to Azure. Oracle Interconnect for Azure avoids routing traffic over the public internet for security and performance reasons.

C). Dynamic Routing Gateway (DRG) and a dedicated virtual circuit: While a dedicated virtual circuit is part of FastConnect, simply stating "a dedicated virtual circuit" is insufficient. FastConnect is the complete service offering that provides the necessary connectivity.

D). Service Gateway and a private endpoint: Service Gateways allow VCN resources to privately access OCI services (like Object Storage) without traversing the internet. They are not used for connecting to other cloud providers like Azure.

NEW QUESTION # 20

You are provisioning Oracle Database@Azure. After creating the Exadata Infrastructure, what is the next essential step within the OCI console related to the database environment?

- A. Configuring the Azure Network Security Groups.
- B. Creating the Azure Virtual Network Peering.
- C. Setting up the cross-connect between OCI and Azure.
- D. Creating the Exadata VM Cluster.

Answer: D

Explanation:
After the Exadata Infrastructure (the physical hardware) is provisioned, the next crucial step within the OCI console is creating the Exadata VM Cluster. This VM cluster is the actual compute environment where the Oracle database instances will run. It's a layer of virtualization on top of the physical Exadata hardware. The other options are related to networking and connectivity, which are important but come after the VM cluster is created.

NEW QUESTION # 21

A company XYZ has been using Oracle Cloud Infrastructure to host their mission-critical applications, but they have decided to start using Azure for some of their workloads. They want to enable connectivity between their Oracle Cloud Infrastructure and Microsoft Azure to create a multicloud architecture.

- A. Use a VPN connection to connect the two clouds.
- B. Use public Internet to connect the two clouds.
- C. Use OCI-Azure Interconnect to establish a private, high-bandwidth, low-latency connection between the two clouds.
- D. None of the above.

Answer: C

Explanation:
The OCI-Azure Interconnect is the official Oracle-Microsoft partnership solution for establishing a private, high-bandwidth, and low-latency connection between OCI and Azure. This interconnect leverages Azure ExpressRoute and Oracle FastConnect to create a dedicated network link, bypassing the public internet for enhanced security and performance. A VPN connection (Option A) is possible but less optimal due to higher latency and lower reliability compared to the interconnect. Using the public internet (Option B) is insecure and unsuitable for mission-critical applications. This solution is detailed in Oracle's multicloud architecture guides and the OCI-Azure partnership documentation, emphasizing its suitability for enterprise multicloud deployments.

NEW QUESTION # 22
To minimize the cost of your Autonomous Database while ensuring it scales automatically to handle peak loads. Which configuration is MOST suitable?

- A. Autonomous Database on Dedicated Infrastructure with manual scaling.
- B. Base Database on bare metal with manual scaling.
- C. Base Database on a virtual machine with auto-scaling configured.
- D. Autonomous Database on Shared Infrastructure with auto-scaling enabled.

Answer: D

Explanation:
Here's why:
Shared Infrastructure: Using shared infrastructure is inherently more cost-effective than dedicated infrastructure. You share the underlying hardware resources with other users, which reduces your costs significantly.
Auto-scaling: Enabling auto-scaling allows the Autonomous Database to automatically adjust its compute and storage resources based on workload demands. This means you only pay for the resources you actually consume. During peak loads, the database scales up to handle the increased demand, and during periods of low activity, it scales down to minimize costs.
Why other options are less suitable:
a) Autonomous Database on Dedicated Infrastructure with manual scaling: Dedicated infrastructure is the most expensive option. Manual scaling requires manual intervention to adjust resources, which is not ideal for handling unpredictable peak loads and does not minimize cost automatically.
c) Base Database on a virtual machine with auto-scaling configured: While this offers some flexibility, it requires significantly more management overhead compared to Autonomous Database. You are responsible for managing the operating system, database software, backups, and other administrative tasks. Autonomous Database handles all of this for you.
d) Base Database on bare metal with manual scaling: Bare metal is the most expensive and least flexible option. Manual scaling makes it unsuitable for handling peak loads efficiently and cost-effectively.
