Questions (Q74-Q79):

NEW QUESTION # 74

What can be done to display the average CPU utilization of a node in a web console widget, if the device studio poller returns a table of multi-core CPU utilizations?

- A. Configure the web console widget to calculate the average of the returned table values.
- B. Display the returned table of values in the web console widget and manually calculate the average.
- C. Select the add calculated value option and use the average function for returned values.
- D. Contact the device vendor to provide an SNMP object ID (OID) for the average CPU utilization statistic.

Answer: C

NEW QUESTION # 75

Which two of the following data sources can be used for polling devices in device studio? (Choose two.)

- A. polled value by a device on an object ID
- B. calculated result from transformation of polled values
- C. night and day standard deviation of calculated value
- D. predicted value from OID baseline

Answer: A,B

NEW QUESTION # 76

An existing NetPath probe is examined, and it is noted that the thickness of connection lines is different on various routes between devices. What does this indicate?

- A. Two probes with different probing intervals are monitoring the same path
- B. The thicker line is monitored in hybrid cloud observability (HCO) and contains other metrics.
- C. The thicker line indicates the more likely path of traffic from source to destination.
- D. The probing interval for the probe is shorter on one path than on the other.

Answer: C

Explanation:

Comprehensive and Detailed Explanation From Exact Extract:

In NetPath visualizations, the thickness of the connection lines represents the likelihood or frequency of traffic using that path.

From the documentation:

"In NetPath, thicker lines between nodes indicate a higher probability that traffic will flow along that path.

This visualization is based on the frequency of successful probes and actual traffic analysis." References:
