NEW QUESTION # 322

What are two common use cases for generative AI solutions? Each correct answer presents a complete solution.

NOTE: Each correct selection is worth one point.

- A. predicting sales revenue based on historical data
- B. creating original artwork from textual descriptions
- C. generating draft responses for customer service agents
- D. classifying email messages as spam or non-spam

Answer: B,C

Explanation:

Generative AI focuses on creating new content rather than just analyzing existing data. As per Microsoft's AI-900 curriculum and Azure OpenAI documentation, typical use cases include generating text, images, code, or other creative outputs based on input prompts.

* A. Generating draft responses for customer service agents - # Correct. GPT-based models can automatically generate draft replies to customer queries, enabling agents to refine responses and increase efficiency.

* B. Creating original artwork from textual descriptions - # Correct. DALL-E, available through Azure OpenAI, can produce unique images based on natural language prompts.

Options C and D are incorrect because they involve predictive or classification models, not generative ones:

- * C. Predicting sales revenue # Regression (machine learning).
  - * D. Classifying email messages # Classification (machine learning).
- Correct answers: A and B.

NEW QUESTION # 323

You are building a tool that will process images from retail stores and identify the products of competitors. The solution must be trained on images provided by your company. Which Azure AI service should you use?

- A. Face
- B. Azure AI Document Intelligence
- C. Azure AI Computer Vision
- D. Azure AI Custom Vision

Answer: D

Explanation:

According to the Microsoft Azure AI Fundamentals (AI-900) official study materials and Microsoft Learn documentation, Azure AI Custom Vision is specifically designed for training custom image classification and object detection models using images that a company provides. In this scenario, the company wants to identify competitor products from images captured in retail stores - a classic use case for custom image classification or object detection, depending on whether you are labeling entire images or identifying multiple items within an image.

Azure AI Custom Vision allows users to:

- * Upload their own labeled training images.
- * Train a model that learns to recognize specific objects (in this case, competitor products).
- * Evaluate, iterate, and deploy the model as an API endpoint for real-time inference.

This fits perfectly with the requirement that the solution "must be trained on images provided by your company." The key phrase here indicates the need for a custom-trained model rather than a prebuilt one.

The other options are not suitable for this scenario:

- * B. Azure AI Computer Vision provides prebuilt models for general-purpose image understanding (e.g., detecting common objects, reading text, describing scenes). It is not intended for training on custom datasets.
- * C. Face service is limited to detecting and recognizing human faces; it cannot be trained to identify products.
- * D. Azure AI Document Intelligence (formerly Form Recognizer) is focused on extracting structured data from documents and forms, not analyzing retail images.

Therefore, per Microsoft's official AI-900 training content, when a solution must be trained on custom company images to recognize specific products, the appropriate service is Azure AI Custom Vision.

The language code is paired with a score indicating the strength of the score.

Box 2: No

Box 3: Yes

Named Entity Recognition: Identify and categorize entities in your text as people, places, organizations, date/time, quantities, percentages, currencies, and more. Well-known entities are also recognized and linked to more information on the web.
