NEW QUESTION # 91

An Organization wants to maintain data related to the line items and assets in custom objects under the line items (Object 'A') and assets (Object Name 'B').

What will ensure the data is saved under assets during assetization and can be leveraged for MACD Orders?

- A. Write an APEX Hook Class during Checkout and AssetToOrder for creating the records as a post step on the API.
- B. Use Field Mapper to map fields from Object A to B and another mapping from Object B to A.
- C. Use Object Mapper to Map the line item object from A to B.
- D. Use Object Mapper to map the line item object from A to B and another mapping from Object B to A.

Answer: D

Explanation:

This scenario involves managing the lifecycle of data stored in custom child objects (Object A attached to Order Items, and Object B attached to Assets). To ensure data integrity throughout the full commercial cycle-Sale (Assetization) and Change (MACD)-a bidirectional mapping strategy is required using the Custom Object Map feature (referred to as Object Mapper in the options).

Assetization (Order to Asset Flow):

When an order is completed, the system runs the "Assetize" process.

To move data from the custom object under the Order Item (Object A) to the custom object under the Asset (Object B), you must define a Source-to-Destination mapping.

This is the A \rightarrow B mapping. Without this, the custom data entered during the sale would be lost and not stored on the customer's asset record.

MACD / Asset-Based Ordering (Asset to Order Flow):

When a customer requests a Move, Add, Change, or Delete (MACD), the system creates a new Order/Quote by reading the existing Asset data.

To ensure the new "Change Order" includes the current details from the Asset (Object B) back onto the line items (Object A) for the agent to view or modify, the system requires a reverse mapping.

This is the B \rightarrow A mapping.

Why other options fail:

Option A (Apex Hook): While feasible for complex edge cases, using Apex is not the best practice when a declarative configuration tool (Object Maps) exists for this exact purpose. It increases maintenance debt.

Option B (Map A to B only): This handles the initial sale but fails during MACD. When the customer tries to change their service later, the data from Object B would not copy back to the new order, leading to data loss or errors.

Option C (Field Mapper): Field Mappers are typically used for mapping specific fields on the primary objects (e.g., OrderLineItem.Description to Asset.Description). For mapping entire related child objects, the Object Map mechanism is the correct architectural component.

NEW QUESTION # 92

Which Statement is accurate regarding Action Plan Templates?

- A. They can be associated with Assessment Task Definitions and Component Tasks
- B. They can be deleted
- C. They cannot be setup in the mobile application
- D. They can be Cloned
