ISQI ISTQB Certified Tester Foundation Level (CTFL) v4.0 Sample Questions (Q79-Q84):

NEW QUESTION # 79

The fact that defects are usually not evenly distributed among the various modules that make up a software application, but rather their distribution tend to reflect the Pareto principle:

- A. is expressed by the testing principle referred to as 'Tests wear out'
- B. is expressed by the testing principle referred to as 'Bug prediction'
- C. is expressed by the testing principle referred to as 'Defects cluster together'
- D. is a false myth

Answer: C

Explanation:

The fact that defects are usually not evenly distributed among the various modules that make up a software application, but rather their distribution tend to reflect the Pareto principle, is expressed by the testing principle referred to as 'Defects cluster together'. This principle states that a small number of modules contain most of the defects detected, or that a small number of causes are responsible for most of the defects. This principle can be used to guide the test analysis and design activities, by prioritizing the testing of the most critical or risky modules, or by applying more rigorous test techniques to them. Therefore, option C is the correct answer.

ISTQB Certified Tester Foundation Level Syllabus v4.01, Section 1.2.1, page 11; ISTQB Glossary v4.02, page 16.

NEW QUESTION # 80

The acceptance criteria associated with a user story:

- A. are often written in a rule-oriented format using the template referred to as "Given/When/Then"
- B. can be written in different formats and represent an aspect of a user story referred to as confirmation' of the so called "3 C's"
- C. must be written in one of the two following formats: scenario-oriented or rule-oriented
- D. are often documented following in rule-oriented format using the following template: "As a [role], I want [feature], so that I can [benefit]"

Answer: B

Explanation:

The acceptance criteria associated with a user story are the conditions that must be met for the user story to be considered done and to deliver the expected value to the user. They are often written in different formats, such as rule-oriented, scenario-oriented, or table-oriented, depending on the nature and complexity of the user story. They represent an aspect of a user story referred to as confirmation, which is one of the so called "3 C's" of user stories. The other two aspects are card and conversation. Card refers to the concise and informal description of the user story, usually following the template: "As a [role], I want [feature], so that I can [benefit]". Conversation refers to the ongoing dialogue between the stakeholders and the team members to clarify and refine the user story and its acceptance criteria. Therefore, option C is the correct answer.

NEW QUESTION # 81

Which ONE of the following options contains the statements (I - V) that MOST ACCURATELY characterize acceptance test levels?

- Acceptance test levels focus on validating and demonstrating readiness for deployment.
- Acceptance test levels must be performed by an independent test team.
- Acceptance test levels often require specific support, such as test harnesses.
- Acceptance test levels ideally should be performed by the intended users.
- Acceptance test levels use component specifications as the test basis for the system.

- A. Statements I and IV
- B. Statements II, IV, and V
- C. Statements II and V
- D. Statements I, III, and V

Answer: A

Explanation:

Comprehensive and Detailed Explanation From Exact Extract:

"Acceptance testing focuses on validation and on demonstrating readiness for deployment... Ideally, acceptance testing should be performed by the intended users." (ISTQB CTFL Syllabus v4.0, Section 2.2.1 - Test Levels, Page 28) Statements II and V are incorrect because:

- * Acceptance testing is not required to be performed by an independent team.
- * Acceptance tests are usually based on requirements or business needs, not component specifications.

NEW QUESTION # 82

Which of the following statements is true?

- A. In Agile software development, the first iterations are exclusively dedicated to testing activities, as testing will be used to drive development, which will be performed in the subsequent iterations
- B. In Agile software development, work product documentation tends to be lightweight and manual tests tend to be often unscripted as they are often produced using experience-based test techniques
- C. Both in Agile software development and in sequential development models, such as the V-model, test levels tend to overlap since they do not usually have defined entry and exit criteria
- D. Sequential development models impose the use of systematic test techniques and do not allow the use of experience-based test techniques

Answer: B

Explanation:

This answer is correct because in Agile software development, work product documentation, such as user stories, acceptance criteria, or test cases, tends to be lightweight and concise, as the focus is on working software and frequent communication rather than comprehensive documentation. Manual tests tend to be often unscripted, as they are often produced using experience-based test techniques, such as error guessing or exploratory testing, which rely on the tester's skills, knowledge, and creativity to find defects and provide feedback. NEW QUESTION # 83

Which of the following is a task the Author is responsible for, as part of a typical formal review?

- A. Recording the anomalies found during the review meeting
- B. Fixing the anomalies found in the work product under review
- C. Determining the people who will be involved in the review
- D. Identifying potential anomalies in the work product under review

Answer: D

Explanation:

Explanation

This answer is correct because identifying potential anomalies in the work product under review is one of the tasks the Author is responsible for, as part of a typical formal review. The Author is the person who creates the work product to be reviewed, such as a requirement specification, a design document, or a test case. The Author's tasks include preparing the work product for the review, identifying potential anomalies in the work product, and fixing the anomalies found in the work product after the review.
