NEW QUESTION # 63

Which option shows the steps to install the Console in a Kubernetes Cluster?

- A. Download and extract release tarball Generate YAML for ConsoleDeploy Console YAML using kubectl
- B. Download the Console and Defender image Download YAML for Defender from the document site Deploy Defender YAML using kubectl
- C. Download and extract release tarball Download the YAML for Console Deploy Console YAML using kubectl
- D. Download the Console and Defender image Generate YAML for DefenderDeploy Defender YAML using kubectl

Answer: A

Explanation:

The installation of the Prisma Cloud Console in a Kubernetes cluster involves a series of steps that start with preparing the necessary deployment configurations, typically provided as YAML files. The process begins by downloading and extracting the release tarball, which contains the necessary files and instructions for the deployment. After extracting the tarball, you generate YAML files for the Console deployment. These YAML files define the Kubernetes resources needed to deploy and run the Console, such as Deployments, Services, and ConfigMaps. Finally, you deploy the Console by applying the generated YAML files using the kubectl command, which communicates with the Kubernetes API to create the specified resources in your cluster.

This process is aligned with Kubernetes best practices for deploying applications and is indicative of the steps required for deploying complex applications like the Prisma Cloud Console. The method ensures that all necessary configurations and dependencies are correctly defined and deployed in the Kubernetes environment.

NEW QUESTION # 64

Prisma Cloud cannot integrate which of the following secrets managers?

Answer: B

Explanation:

Prisma Cloud integrates with various secret managers to manage sensitive information such as passwords, tokens, and keys.

However, it cannot integrate with IBM Secret Manager. The other options, Azure Key Vault, HashiCorp Vault, and AWS Secret Manager, are supported for integration with Prisma Cloud, providing secure storage and handling of secrets.

NEW QUESTION # 65

When would a policy apply if the policy is set under Defend > Vulnerability > Images > Deployed?

- A. when the Image is built and when a Container is started form an Image
- B. when the Image is built
- C. when a serverless repository is scanned
- D. when a Container is started form an Image

Answer: D

Explanation:

In Prisma Cloud, policies set under "Defend > Vulnerability > Images > Deployed" are specifically designed to apply at runtime, i.e., when a container is instantiated from an image. This ensures that any image, regardless of its point of origin or creation time, is evaluated against the defined vulnerability policies at the time it is deployed as a container in the environment. This runtime enforcement is crucial for catching vulnerabilities that may not have been present or detected during the image build phase, providing an additional layer of security for running applications.
