- A. File a report to the regulator and reject the LC.
- B. Use secondary sources to obtain more identifiers and information.
- C. Immediately reject the payment and close the customer account.
- D. Immediately reject the LC and list the company name internally.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Sanctions and Compliance Domains state that when a potential sanctions match occurs, the first step is to conduct a proper investigation to determine whether the alert is a true match or false positive. This includes obtaining additional identifiers such as addresses, IMO numbers, registration numbers, or corporate details.

Immediate rejection or reporting is only appropriate after confirming a true match. Premature rejection without verification violates due diligence expectations. Closing the customer account is not justified without confirmed sanctions involvement.

Reference:

Investigation procedures for potential sanctions matches.

Requirements to gather additional identifiers before determining match status.

NEW QUESTION # 99

- A. Location
- B. Employer of an existing customer
- C. Name of person
- D. Account number
- E. Date of birth of a new customer
- F. Identification number

Answer: C,E,F

Explanation:

Sanctions screening systems rely on key personal identifiers to distinguish between true matches and false positives. The Sanctions and Compliance Domains highlight that the most essential variables for screening individuals include name, date of birth, and identification numbers. These identifiers significantly enhance matching accuracy and reduce false positives, especially when screening against common or high-frequency names.

Location, account numbers, and employers are not primary screening variables for matching against sanctions lists. Although these fields may support enhanced due diligence, they are not core identity attributes used for automated sanctions screening.
