NEW QUESTION # 29
What critical information should be tracked for your contracts? (Choose two.)

- A. What needs to be cancelled
- B. What assets each contract covers
- C. What each contract costs
- D. Who purchased the assets

Answer: B,C

Explanation:
According to the ServiceNow Hardware Asset Management overview document1, contracts are records that define the terms and conditions for the acquisition, maintenance, or disposal of assets1. They can include information such as vendor, start date, end date, cost, and renewal options1.
According to the ServiceNow Data Sheet on Contract and Renewal Management2, some of the critical information that should be tracked for contracts are2:
What each contract costs: This information helps users to monitor and optimize the total cost of ownership (TCO) of their assets, as well as to plan and budget for future contract renewals or negotiations2.
What assets each contract covers: This information helps users to identify and manage the assets that are under contract, such as software licenses, hardware devices, or enterprise assets2. It also helps users to align their asset investments to their business outcomes and avoid penalties or service disruptions2.
The other options are not critical information that should be tracked for contracts. Who purchased the assets and what needs to be cancelled are not relevant to the contract management process, as they do not affect the contract terms, conditions, or performance2.

NEW QUESTION # 31

You have just created a new hardware model record for a group of laptops you purchased. When does normalization first run to normalize the record?

- A. When the weekly scheduled HAM - Normalization job runs
- B. When you save the hardware model record
- C. When the daily scheduled HAM - Daily job runs
- D. When you click the Normalize Hardware Model link under Related Links

Answer: B

Explanation:
Normalization is the process of standardizing the hardware model data by manufacturer name, model name, and model number1. Normalization helps to maintain a clean and consistent configuration management database (CMDB) and to avoid duplicate or inaccurate hardware models1.
Normalization first runs to normalize the record when you save the hardware model record1.
This means that when you create or edit a hardware model record, the system automatically checks the record against the normalization rules and the Hardware Content Service Lifecycle data, and updates the record with the normalized values if applicable1.
Therefore, the answer that reflects when normalization first runs is C. When you save the hardware model record.
The other options are not the correct answer because they describe different scenarios or actions:
A: When the daily scheduled HAM - Daily job runs: This is not the correct answer, because the daily scheduled HAM - Daily job does not run normalization. The daily scheduled HAM - Daily job is a scheduled job that runs various tasks related to hardware asset management, such as updating the asset status, calculating the depreciation, and sending notifications2.
B: When the weekly scheduled HAM - Normalization job runs: This is not the correct answer, because the weekly scheduled HAM - Normalization job does not run normalization for the first time. The weekly scheduled HAM - Normalization job is a scheduled job that runs normalization for all the existing hardware models in the CMDB on a weekly basis1. It does not affect the newly created or edited hardware models, which are normalized when they are saved1.
D: When you click the Normalize Hardware Model link under Related Links: This is not the correct answer, because clicking the Normalize Hardware Model link under Related Links does not run normalization for the first time. Clicking the Normalize Hardware Model link under Related Links is a manual action that allows you to run normalization for a specific hardware model record at any time1. It does not affect the automatic normalization that runs when you save the hardware model record1. References:

* The main purposes of transfer order line tasks are2:

* To help track service levels and the time frame needed to complete a transfer order: Transfer order line tasks have a due date and a state that indicate the progress and completion of the transfer order line. They also have a priority and an assignment group that determine the urgency and the responsibility of the transfer order line. These fields help users to monitor and manage the service levels and the time frame needed to complete a transfer order.
