NEW QUESTION # 279

Which of the following does MOT describe a reason why testing is necessary?

- A. The customer decided that 100% branch coverage shall be achieved
- B. The risks associated with delivering the system are far higher than the cost of testing
- C. The acquisition of test automation tools was based on the assumption that it will be used in all projects
- D. For avionics and pharmaceutical systems software testing is mandated by standards

Answer: C

Explanation:

Testing is necessary for various reasons, such as:

- * To detect defects and failures that may affect the quality, performance, reliability or security of a software product or system
- * To verify that a software product or system meets its specified requirements, expectations and standards
- * To validate that a software product or system fulfills its intended purpose and satisfies its stakeholders' needs
- * To provide information and feedback about the status and risks of a software product or system
- * To comply with regulations or contractual obligations that mandate testing for certain types of software products or systems

The following statements describe some reasons why testing is necessary:

- * A) The customer decided that 100% branch coverage shall be achieved. This is a reason why testing is necessary, as it reflects a contractual obligation or a quality standard that requires testing to measure and achieve a certain level of code coverage.
- * C) For avionics and pharmaceutical systems software testing is mandated by standards. This is a reason why testing is necessary, as it reflects a regulation or a compliance requirement that mandates testing for certain types of software products or systems that have high safety or security risks.
- * D) The risks associated with delivering the system are far higher than the cost of testing. This is a reason why testing is necessary, as it reflects a risk-based approach that considers testing as an investment to reduce the probability and impact of potential failures or defects. The following statement does not describe a reason why testing is necessary:
- * B) The acquisition of test automation tools was based on the assumption that it will be used in all projects. This is not a reason why testing is necessary, as it reflects a business decision or a resource allocation that does not justify the need or purpose of testing. Test automation tools are not always suitable or beneficial for all projects, and testing can be performed with or without test automation tools. NEW QUESTION # 280

Which statement about use case testing is true?

- A. The test cases are designed to find defects in the data flow.
- B. The test cases are designed to be used by real users, not by professional testers
- C. The test cases are always designed by customers or end users.
- D. The test cases are designed to find defects in the process flow.

Answer: D

Explanation:

Use case testing is a technique that helps identify test cases that exercise the whole system on a transaction by transaction basis from start to finish. Use cases are descriptions of how users interact with the system to achieve a specific goal. Use case testing is not focused on data flow, but rather on process flow. Use case testing can be performed by professional testers, customers or end users, depending on the context. Use case testing does not require the test cases to be designed by customers or end users, but rather by anyone who has access to the use case specifications. NEW QUESTION # 281

A bank software has a feature of locking down accounts that have an overdraft higher than $10,000.

Due to a bug in the code, the system locks down accounts once they reached $1000 overdraft.

Based on this context, which of the following is correct statement

- A. It is an example of a defect that it goes undetected, will cause harm to the end customer and to the company (the bank)
- B. It is an example of a defect, that if goes undetected, will cause harm to the end customer but not to the company (the bank)
- C. It is an example of a defect that if goes undetected, will not cause harm to the end customer, but will cause harm to the company (the bank)
- D. It is an example of a defect that if goes undetected, will not cause any real harm to either the end customer or to the company (the bank)

Answer: A

Explanation:

A defect is a flaw in a component or system that can cause the component or system to fail to perform its required function. A defect can cause harm to the end customer, the company, or both, depending on the impact and severity of the failure. In this case, the defect in the code causes the system to lock down accounts that have an overdraft higher than $1000, instead of $10,000. This can cause harm to the end customer, as they may lose access to their funds and face inconvenience or financial difficulties. This can also cause harm to the company, as they may lose customer trust and satisfaction, face legal issues or complaints, or incur additional costs for fixing the defect and restoring the accounts.
