NEW QUESTION # 199

Which Lightning code segment should be written to declare dependencies on a Lightning component, c:accountList, that is used in a Visualforce page?

- A.

```
<lightning:componentLoader>
  <lightning:component src="/resources/c:accountList" />
</lightning:componentLoader>
```
- B.

```
<aura:component>
  <aura:dependency resource="/resources/c:accountList" />
</aura:component>
```
- C.

```
<aura:component access="GLOBAL" extends="c:outApp">
  <aura:dependency resource="/resources/c:accountList" />
</aura:component>
```
- D.

```
<aura:application access="GLOBAL" extends="ltng:outApp">
  <aura:dependency resource="/resources/c:accountList" />
</aura:application>
```

Answer: C

Explanation:

The correct answer is option C. The Lightning code segment that should be written to declare dependencies on a Lightning component, c:accountList, that is used in a Visualforce page is:

`<ltng:require scripts="{!$Resource.jsLibraries + '/jsLibOne.js'}" afterScriptsLoaded="{!c:scriptsLoaded}" />` This code segment uses the `ltng:require` tag, which is a base Lightning component that allows you to load external JavaScript libraries and stylesheets in your Lightning components. The `scripts` attribute specifies the name and path of the JavaScript file that is uploaded as a static resource. The `afterScriptsLoaded` attribute specifies the name of the client-side controller action that is called after the scripts are loaded. This way, you can ensure that the `c:accountList` component has access to the JavaScript library that it depends on.

The other options are not valid code segments for declaring dependencies on a Lightning component. Option A uses the `lng:dependency` tag, which is used to declare dependencies between Lightning components, not between a Lightning component and a JavaScript library. Option B uses the `lng:include` tag, which is not a valid tag in the Lightning component framework. Option D uses the `lng:import` tag, which is also not a valid tag in the Lightning component framework.
