DAMA Data Management Fundamentals Sample Questions (Q207-Q212):

NEW QUESTION # 207

Enterprise Data Architects should support projects for potential:

- A. Non-compliance to data standards
- B. Legal reviews
- C. Data-focused security reviews
- D. Incomplete data requests
- E. Planning for metadata development

Answer: C

Explanation:

Data architects play a critical role in ensuring data security aligns with architectural designs, particularly in project support. The DAMA-DMBOK notes: "Data architects should support data-focused security reviews to ensure that data access controls, encryption, and compliance requirements are integrated into the architecture" (DMBOK2, Chapter 4: Data Architecture, p. 149). Options A, B, C, and E are less directly tied to architects' roles: A is a governance issue, B is legal counsel's domain, C is operational, and E is metadata management.

- B. Determine the security requirements for accessing the data
- C. Plan structure of the metadata repository
- D. Determine the impact of business processes and customer lifecycles
- E. Provide a clear definition of affected and non-affected data entities

Answer: E

Explanation:

During initial project scoping, a data model, particularly a conceptual or logical model, helps define the scope by identifying which data entities are affected or unaffected by the project. The DAMA-DMBOK states: "Data models are used in project scoping to define the boundaries of the data domain, identifying affected entities and their relationships to ensure alignment with business requirements" (DMBOK2, Chapter 5: Data Modeling and Design, p. 181). Other options are less accurate: A is too broad, as models support but don't directly determine process impacts; B involves detailed physical modeling, not initial scoping; C relates to metadata management; and E pertains to security, not scoping. Reference:DAMA-DMBOK2, Chapter 5: Data Modeling and Design, Section 3.3, p. 181.
