CFA Institute Certificate in ESG Investing ESG-Investing Prüfungsfragen mit Lösungen (Q155-Q160):

155. Frage

The Taskforce on Nature-Related Financial Disclosure (TNFD) defines nature as:

- A. All environmental assets that relate to diverse ecosystems
- B. The stock of renewable and non-renewable natural resources yielding a flow of benefits to people
- C. The natural world and its diversity of living organisms and their interactions

Antwort: C

Begründung:

The TNFD defines nature as the natural world, which includes a diverse range of living organisms and their interactions. This broader definition of nature emphasizes biodiversity and ecosystem health as critical factors in managing environmental risks and opportunities for businesses and investors.

156. Frage

For engagement strategies to deliver results in a cost-effective and time-effective manner, an investor needs to:

- A. Have clear escalation measures in case engagement fails
- B. Raise every possible concern with a company in its portfolio that is most in need of engagement
- C. Frame the engagement topic into a broader discussion around strategy and not the financial performance of the company

Antwort: A

Begründung:

Effective engagement strategies require clear escalation measures if a company fails to address ESG concerns.

Escalation steps include:

- * Private dialogue with management
- * Public shareholder resolutions
- * Proxy voting or divestment threats

Option A is incorrect because investors prioritize key ESG concerns rather than engaging on every issue.

Option B is misleading- financial performance is a critical part of ESG engagement discussions.

157. Frage

Which of the following is most likely a secondary source of ESG information?

- A. Corporate sustainability reports
- B. ESG rating reports
- C. Annual reports

Antwort: B

Begründung:

ESG (Environmental, Social, and Governance) information is critical for investors to evaluate the sustainability and ethical impact of their investments. Different sources of ESG information vary in their primary and secondary nature based on how they are created and disseminated. Understanding the distinctions among these sources helps investors make informed decisions.

1. Annual Reports: Annual reports are primary sources of ESG information. They are produced by the companies themselves and provide a comprehensive overview of financial performance, strategic direction, and often include sections dedicated to ESG initiatives and performance. These reports are considered primary because they originate directly from the reporting entity and provide firsthand insights into a company's operations and ESG commitments.
2. ESG Rating Reports: ESG rating reports are considered secondary sources of ESG information. These reports are produced by independent third-party agencies like MSCI, Sustainalytics, and others. ESG rating agencies analyze data from multiple sources, including company disclosures, government databases, media reports, and other specialized datasets. They assess and rate companies on their ESG performance, providing an independent evaluation that investors can use to compare companies across sectors and regions. ESG rating reports consolidate and interpret primary data to provide a synthesized and often standardized view of a company's ESG standing.
3. Corporate Sustainability Reports: Corporate sustainability reports, like annual reports, are primary sources of ESG information. These reports are specifically focused on a company's sustainability practices, environmental impact, social responsibility initiatives, and governance structures. They are published by the companies themselves and offer detailed insights into their sustainability strategies and achievements.

Detailed Explanation:

* Primary Source: A primary source is an original document or firsthand account that has not been interpreted by another party. In the context of ESG information, primary sources include documents produced directly by the company, such as annual reports and corporate sustainability reports. These documents provide raw data and insights directly from the source, making them essential for understanding a company's self-reported ESG performance.

* Secondary Source: A secondary source interprets and analyzes primary data to provide an additional layer of insight. ESG rating reports are secondary sources because they take data from various primary sources, analyze it using specific methodologies, and present an independent assessment of a company's ESG performance. These ratings help investors by offering an objective view that can be compared across different companies and industries.

References from CFA ESG Investing:

* ESG Ratings and Methodologies: The CFA Institute highlights the importance of ESG ratings as secondary sources of information that help investors evaluate the relative ESG performance of

* companies. These ratings are based on comprehensive methodologies that incorporate data from primary sources and apply consistent analytical frameworks (as detailed in the MSCI ESG Ratings Methodology Executive Summary).

* Use of ESG Information: The CFA curriculum emphasizes the use of both primary and secondary sources of ESG information for thorough investment analysis. Primary sources provide direct insights from companies, while secondary sources like ESG rating reports offer independent evaluations that can enhance the investment decision-making process by providing benchmarks and comparisons.

In conclusion, ESG rating reports are most likely a secondary source of ESG information because they compile, analyze, and interpret data from various primary sources to provide an independent assessment of a company's ESG performance.

158. Frage

ESG philosophy can be embedded within an investment mandate to determine:

- A. the asset owner's strategic asset allocation only
- B. both the asset owner's tactical and strategic asset allocations
- C. the asset owner's tactical asset allocation only

Antwort: B

Begründung:

Step 1: ESG Philosophy in Investment Mandates

An ESG philosophy embedded within an investment mandate means integrating ESG factors into the overall investment strategy, influencing both short-term (tactical) and long-term (strategic) decisions.

Step 2: Tactical vs. Strategic Asset Allocation

* Tactical Asset Allocation: Short-term adjustments to the asset mix based on market conditions.

* Strategic Asset Allocation: Long-term asset mix decisions based on the investor's objectives, risk tolerance, and time horizon.

Step 3: Verification with ESG Investing References

Embedding ESG philosophy within an investment mandate affects both tactical and strategic asset allocations, ensuring ESG factors are considered in all investment decisions: "Integrating ESG considerations into investment mandates ensures that both tactical and strategic asset allocation decisions align with sustainability goals".

Conclusion: ESG philosophy can be embedded within an investment mandate to determine both the asset owner's tactical and strategic asset allocations.

159. Frage

For engagement strategies to deliver meaningful results in a cost-effective and time-effective manner, investors must:

- A. frame the engagement topic into a broader discussion around strategy and avoid discussing long-term financial performance with a company's board
- B. raise all possible concerns with the company which has the most risk in their portfolios
- C. identify which company in their portfolio is most in need of engagement

Antwort: C

Begründung:

Effective Engagement Strategies:

* For engagement to be meaningful and cost-effective, investors need to prioritize and identify which companies in their portfolio require the most attention.

Targeted Engagement:

* By focusing on the companies most in need of engagement, investors can allocate their resources more efficiently.

* This targeted approach helps in addressing significant ESG risks and opportunities that can materially impact the company's performance.

Broader Discussion:

* While it is important to frame the engagement topic within the company's broader strategy, discussing long-term financial performance and risks is crucial for holistic engagement.

References:

* Identifying the company most in need of engagement is a recommended strategy in the 2021 ESG investing documentation.
