NEW QUESTION # 112

Halfway through the execution of an agile project, a retrospective meeting is held. One of the team members believes that the actual time and cost to complete the work has consistently been greater than what was originally estimated.

Which of the following activities should be performed next?

- A. The team should consolidate small stories into larger ones so that there are less work items to be estimated.

- C. The team should reevaluate time and cost estimates to reflect the latest understanding of the work effort.
- D. The team should perform a spike to conduct research on their technical solutions and prove their viability.

Answer: C

Explanation:

The correct answer is D - The team should reevaluate time and cost estimates to reflect the latest understanding of the work effort. Agile supports progressive elaboration and adaptive planning. When actual effort consistently exceeds estimates, it signals a need to recalibrate estimation practices. The team should revisit their velocity, estimation techniques, and potentially re-estimate upcoming work with improved understanding.

PMI Agile Practice Guide:

"Agile uses adaptive planning, where teams update estimates based on new information. This supports better forecasting and risk management." (PMI Agile Practice Guide, Section 5.3 - Estimation and Velocity) Mike Griffiths:

"Estimation accuracy improves over time. Agile teams regularly inspect estimation practices and adjust based on historical data and team maturity." (PMI-ACP Exam Prep, Chapter 5 - Adaptive Planning)
