- C. Test logs that document the results of test execution.
- D. Automated test scripts used for test execution.

Answer: C

Explanation:

Comprehensive and Detailed In-Depth Explanation:

NEW QUESTION # 20

Which ONE of the following options BEST describes Behavior-Driven Development (BDD)?

- A. Is primarily focused on non-functional testing techniques to ensure system reliability and performance.
- B. Defines test cases at a low level, close to the implementation, using unit test frameworks.
- C. Expresses the desired behavior of an application with test cases written in a simple form of natural language that is easy to understand by stakeholders-usually using the Given/When/Then format. Test cases are then automatically translated into executable tests.
- D. Requires testing to be performed after development is completed to validate software functionality.

Answer: C

Explanation:

Comprehensive and Detailed In-Depth Explanation:BDD emphasizes collaboration between developers, testers, and business stakeholders to define system behavior in a readable format (A). It typically uses the Given-When-Then syntax. Unlike unit testing (B), BDD is at a higher level of abstraction. It does not focus solely on non-functional testing (C) and encourages early testing rather than post-development validation (D).

NEW QUESTION # 21

As the last stage of a test cycle of an embedded device, you are performing exploratory testing. You observed that some character (A, X and Z) sent via a serial port to the device do not get registered on the device whereas they should be. You suspect that this could be due to a wrong configuration of the "bit parity" parameter.

Which of the following items of an incident report would you be UNABLE to write down based on this information?

- A. Actual result
- B. Expected result
- C. Test setup details
- D. Test case identifier

Answer: D

Explanation:

An incident report is a document that records the details of an incident. An incident report typically contains the following items:

* Identifier: A unique identifier for the incident report

* Summary: A concise summary of the incident

* Description: A detailed description of the incident, including the steps to reproduce it, the expected and actual results, and any relevant screenshots or logs
* Severity: The degree of impact that the incident has on the system
* Priority: The level of urgency for resolving the incident
* Status: The current state of the incident, such as new, open, resolved, closed, etc.
* Resolution: The action taken to resolve the incident, such as fix, workaround, reject, etc. Based on the information given in the question, the tester would be able to write down all of these items except for the test case identifier. A test case identifier is a unique identifier for a test case that is used to link it to other test artifacts, such as test plans, test scripts, test results or incident reports. However, since the tester is performing exploratory testing, there is no predefined test case that can be associated with the incident. Exploratory testing is an approach to testing that emphasizes learning, test design and test execution at the same time. Exploratory testing relies on the tester's skills, creativity and intuition to explore the software under test and discover defects. Exploratory testing does not use formal test cases or scripts, but rather uses test charters or missions that guide the tester's actions and objectives.

- * (B) is correct as automated tests produce consistent and unbiased results.
- * (C) is correct because automation reduces human errors in repetitive tests.
