IIBA Agile Analysis Certification Sample Questions (Q94-Q99):

NEW QUESTION # 94

Making decisions based on a realistic understanding of current organizational strengths, capabilities, and challenges, is represented in the agile analysis principle of:

- A. Think as a customer
- B. Individuals and interactions over process and tools
- C. Understand what is doable
- D. See the whole

Answer: D

NEW QUESTION # 95

Working at the Strategy Horizon, the team uses analysis techniques to understand the creation of value propositions for various customer segments. This allows the team to streamline the initiatives and is an example of the following agile business analysis principle:

- A. Avoid waste
- B. Customer collaboration over contract negotiation
- C. Minimize documentation
- D. Get real using examples

Answer: A

Explanation:

Applying the principle of Avoid Waste at the Strategy Horizon involves ensuring that only the most impactful initiatives are selected for development. By using analysis techniques to deeply understand value propositions for different customer segments, the team can streamline its portfolio, removing or de-prioritizing initiatives that do not clearly contribute to satisfying customer needs. This prevents the organization from investing time and resources into building products or features that customers do not actually want or need. In the agile context, waste is defined as anything that does not add value to the end customer. Streamlining initiatives based on clear value propositions ensures that the delivery pipeline remains focused on high-value work, thereby increasing the overall efficiency and effectiveness of the organization ' s strategic execution.
