- A. The enterprise balanced scorecard is aligned with IT dashboards.
- B. IT processes are improved in line with business requirements.
- C. IT key performance indicators (KPIs) are included in the enterprise-level KPI dashboard.
- D. Business executives better understand IT's value contribution to the enterprise

Answer: D

Explanation:
According to the ISACA paper on IT Governance Reporting1, the most important benefit of effective IT governance reporting is that it helps business executives better understand IT's value contribution to the enterprise. IT governance reporting is the process of communicating relevant and reliable information about the performance, value and risk of IT to the stakeholders who are responsible for making decisions and taking actions related to IT. Effective IT governance reporting enables business executives to have a clear and comprehensive view of how IT supports and enables the achievement of the enterprise's strategy, objectives and goals. It also helps business executives to assess the alignment, efficiency and effectiveness of IT, as well as to identify and address the gaps, issues and opportunities for improvement. Effective IT governance reporting fosters trust, collaboration and accountability between business and IT, and enhances the reputation and credibility of IT within the enterprise. The other options are not as important as business executives better understanding IT's value contribution to the enterprise, as they are more related to the means or outcomes of effective IT governance reporting, rather than the benefit itself.
