NEW QUESTION # 19

Which one of the following protection schemes can provide OLT-level protection?

- A. Type B single-homing
- B. Type B dual-homing
- C. Ethernet port protection group
- D. LACP

Answer: B

Explanation:

OLT-level (device-level) protection is achieved by dual-homing ONUs to two independent OLT interfaces so that services can switch to another OLT when one fails. In Huawei protection taxonomy, the dual-homing scheme (as contrasted with single-homing) provides device-side redundancy for the OLT. By comparison, Ethernet port protection groups and LACP protect uplink links and bandwidth at Layer 2, not the OLT device itself; single-homing does not protect against OLT failure.

NEW QUESTION # 22

(Radio) The following is not a QoS service model is

- A. Best Effort
- B. IntServ
- C. DiffServ
- D. FIFO service

Answer: D

Explanation:

In Huawei's QoS theory (aligned with IETF), the recognized service models are Best Effort, Integrated Services (IntServ), and Differentiated Services (DiffServ). FIFO is a queueing discipline (scheduling method) rather than a service model. FIFO simply forwards packets in arrival order without classification or guarantees, and while it can be used within Best Effort, it is not itself a service model.
