EC-COUNCIL EC Council Certified Incident Handler (ECIH v3) Sample Questions (Q292-Q297):

NEW QUESTION # 292

A software application in which advertising banners are displayed while the program is running that delivers ads to display pop-up windows or bars that appears on a computer screen or browser is called:

- A. Trojan
- B. Virus

- C. Worm
- D. RootKit
- E. adware (spelled all lower case)

Answer: E

NEW QUESTION # 293

A national research agency was recently subjected to a comprehensive cybersecurity compliance audit. During the audit, reviewers evaluated how the agency's incident response unit manages harmful code samples during investigations. The assessment revealed that team members often interacted with dangerous file payloads directly on enterprise-connected systems used for general operations. Furthermore, no precautionary renaming was applied to prevent accidental triggering, and sensitive materials were placed in areas accessible by non-specialized personnel. The auditors flagged these practices as severely noncompliant with safe sample processing protocols and recommended urgent changes to prevent operational fallout or accidental outbreaks.

Which best practice for secure handling of malicious code was most clearly disregarded in this case?

- A. Tagging malware sample files with platform-specific behavior indicators for improved categorization.
- B. Storing malware samples with non-executable file extensions in isolated environments.
- C. Encrypting all malware sample files using symmetric encryption.
- D. Create vulnerability documentation for each malware sample to support threat profiling and archival.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Comprehensive and Detailed Explanation (ECIH-aligned):

This scenario highlights violations of forensic readiness and safe malware handling, which are explicitly covered in the ECIH First Response and Malware Analysis modules. ECIH stresses that malware samples must never be handled on production or enterprise-connected systems, as this creates a high risk of accidental execution, lateral infection, and organizational impact.

Option A is correct because ECIH mandates that malicious code samples be stored in isolated, non-networked environments and renamed with non-executable extensions (for example, .malware, .bin, or .txt) to prevent accidental execution. This practice ensures operational safety and preserves forensic integrity.

Option B improves confidentiality but does not prevent accidental execution. Option C supports documentation but does not mitigate execution risk. Option D aids classification but does not address safe handling.

The described behavior—handling live malware on enterprise systems without isolation or renaming—directly contradicts ECIH best practices. Proper sample isolation, renaming, and access restriction are mandatory controls to prevent secondary incidents during investigations, making Option A the correct answer.

NEW QUESTION # 294

An attack on a network is BEST blocked using which of the following?

- A. IPS device inline
- B. Load balancer
- C. Web proxy
- D. HIPS

Answer: A

Explanation:

An Intrusion Prevention System (IPS) device placed inline is best suited to block attacks on a network actively. Being inline allows the IPS to analyze and take action on the traffic as it passes through the device, effectively preventing malicious traffic from reaching its target. The IPS can detect and block a wide range of attacks in real-time by using various detection methods, such as signature-based detection, anomaly detection, and policy-based detection. Unlike Host-based Intrusion Prevention Systems (HIPS), web proxies, or load balancers, an inline IPS is specifically designed to inspect and act on incoming and outgoing network traffic to prevent attacks before they reach network devices or applications.

References: The Incident Handler (ECIH v3) certification materials discuss network security controls and emphasize the role of intrusion prevention systems in protecting networks against threats.

- A. Authentic
- B. Admissible
- C. Complete
- D. Believable
