NEW QUESTION # 108
Which of the following is a benefit of information mapping?

- A. It enables improved business process integration.
- B. It provides a framework for effective business requirements analysis.
- C. It highlights information requirements not addressed by a business architecture.
- D. It provides a basis to support decision-making throughout the business.

Answer: D

Explanation:
One of the benefits of information mapping is that it provides a basis to support decision-making throughout the business1.
Information mapping is a technique that can be used to document and visualize the information concepts and their relationships that are relevant for the business1. Information mapping can help to identify the information needs, sources, flows, quality, and value of the business, as well as the gaps, issues, and opportunities for improvement1. By providing a clear and consistent view of the information landscape, information mapping can enable better informed and more effective decisions at all levels of the business.

NEW QUESTION # 109
Which of the following best summarizes the purpose of Enterprise Architecture?

- A. Controlling the bigger changes.
- B. Governing the Stakeholders.
- C. Taking major improvement decisions.
- D. Guiding effective change.

Answer: D

Explanation:
The purpose of Enterprise Architecture, within the context of TOGAF, is to establish a clear and comprehensive blueprint for how an organization can effectively achieve its current and future objectives through a structured approach. Enterprise Architecture guides effective change by providing a long-term view of the organization's processes, systems, and technologies so that individual projects can build capabilities that fit into a cohesive whole. It helps to ensure that IT investments are aligned with business goals, supports the management of complex IT landscapes, and provides a systematic approach for the adoption of emerging technologies. Essentially, it acts as a strategic framework that facilitates the translation of business vision and strategy into effective enterprise change.

NEW QUESTION # 110
Which of the following is a purpose of mapping capabilities to value stream stages?

- A. To describe the business in terms of services provided and consumed.
- B. To provide a self-contained business description that is independent of the organizational structure.
- C. To classify, group, and align capabilities into categories for a deeper understanding.
- D. To identify and eliminate business capabilities that do not contribute to the business.

Answer: D

Explanation:
The purpose of this activity is to identify which business capabilities (out of the total set of capabilities) are critical to delivering stakeholder value, and therefore which ones need to be performed to a sufficient standard of quality to meet stakeholder expectations. It also helps to identify those business capabilities that do not contribute toward any of the core value streams, and which may be eliminated from the business.
The primary purpose of mapping capabilities to value stream stages within the TOGAF framework is to analyze how each capability contributes to delivering value to the customer. This process helps to identify:
* Capabilities essential for value creation:These are the capabilities that directly contribute to the activities within the value stream and are critical for delivering customer value.
* Capabilities with indirect or unclear contributions:These may require further investigation to determine their role in the value stream.
* Non-contributing capabilities:These capabilities do not play a role in the value stream and may be candidates for elimination or optimization to improve efficiency and reduce costs.
