NEW QUESTION # 184

Refer to the exhibit. An enterprise is using wireless as the main network connectivity for clients. To ensure service continuity, a pair of controllers will be installed in a datacentre. An engineer is designing SSO on the pair of controllers. What needs to be included in the design to avoid having the secondary controller go into maintenance mode?

- A. The Keep alive timer is too low, which causes synchronization problems.
- B. The Global Configuration of SSO is set to Disabled on the controller.
- C. The redundancy port must be the same subnet as the redundancy mgmt.
- D. The connection between the redundancy ports is missing.

Answer: D

Explanation:

For Stateful Switchover (SSO) to function correctly, the redundancy ports on both the primary and secondary controllers must be directly connected. This allows for the necessary state and configuration information to be synchronized between the two controllers, preventing the secondary controller from entering maintenance mode in the event of a failover.

- A. high availability
- B. collision domains
- C. output power
- D. interface throughput

Answer: C
