- A. Change instance backup schedule
- B. Decrease data volume size
- C. Recover instance

Answer: C,D

NEW QUESTION # 34

In SAP HANA Cloud, which tasks are handled by the cloud provider? Note: There are 3 correct answers to this question.

- A. Installing, configuring, and upgrading the operating system
- B. Managing users, roles, and permissions in the database
- C. Backing up the operating system and the database software
- D. Tuning the database to run optimally on the underlying operating system and hardware
- E. Sizing, provisioning, and monitoring the database

Answer: A,D,E

Explanation:

In SAP HANA Cloud, certain tasks are managed by the cloud provider to ensure seamless operation and maintenance of the infrastructure, which supports the SAP HANA database. The responsibilities include:

* Tuning the database to run optimally on the underlying operating system and hardware (A): This involves adjustments and optimizations that make sure the database operates efficiently with the available resources.

* Installing, configuring, and upgrading the operating system (C): These are typical responsibilities of a cloud provider, ensuring that the OS on which SAP HANA runs is correctly set up, secured, and kept up-to-date.

* Sizing, provisioning, and monitoring the database (D): The cloud provider also handles the initial sizing based on requirements, provisions the database, and continually monitors its performance and health to anticipate and address any issues. Managing users, roles, and permissions within the database (E) typically remains an administrative task for the SAP HANA customers rather than the cloud provider, focusing more on business rules and governance. Backing up the operating system and the database software (B) also often falls under the responsibilities managed by the customer, depending on the service model (IaaS vs. PaaS).

SAP HANA Architecture

NEW QUESTION # 35

Which container types are available in SAP HANA Deployment Infrastructure (HDI)? Note: There are 2 correct answers to this question.

- A. Kubernetes
- B. Docker
- C. Runtime
- D. Design time

Answer: C,D

Explanation:

The container types available in SAP HANA Deployment Infrastructure (HDI) are "Runtime" and "Design time". Runtime containers are used to run applications and services, storing the actual data and database objects. Design time containers, on the other hand, are used during the development phase and include artifacts and source files necessary to build the runtime objects. HDI does not use Docker or Kubernetes directly as container types, but these technologies might be used in the broader context of SAP HANA deployment and operations. References= SAP HANA HDI documentation which details the architecture and purpose of different container types used within the HDI framework.

Database Security

NEW QUESTION # 36

How are savepoints triggered?

Note: There are 2 correct answers to this question.

- A. By performing a database backup
- B. By performing a delta merge
- C. By a database soft shutdown
- D. By issuing a transactional commit

Answer: C,D

Explanation:

Savepoints in SAP HANA are triggered by:
B. By issuing a transactional commit, which initiates a savepoint to ensure that all committed transactions are durably written to the disk.
C. By a database soft shutdown, during which SAP HANA ensures that all changes are safely written to the disk in the form of a final savepoint to prevent any data loss. Savepoints are not directly triggered by performing a delta merge or a database backup; these processes may coincide with savepoints for consistency but do not inherently cause them. References= SAP HANA administration guide detailing how transactional data management is handled, including the automatic triggering of savepoints at specific operations like shutdowns and commits.
