CENTRAL QUESTION

How can schools and districts ensure that all students benefit from school counseling programs?

KEY INSIGHTS

Breaking Down the Issue	Strategies to Consider	Strategies to Avoid
<ul style="list-style-type: none">■ Access to school counselors improves academic outcomes, social-emotional development, and postsecondary enrollment.■ The students who could benefit the most from counselors typically have the least access to them.■ During COVID-19, virtual work and added non-counseling duties have further limited students' access to school counselors while student needs have accumulated.	<ul style="list-style-type: none">■ The most effective counseling programs focus comprehensively on academic, social-emotional, and postsecondary domains in addition to being preventative and using data to better target student needs.■ When designing a comprehensive counseling program, schools can rely on existing, validated, counselor-led interventions in all three counseling domains.■ Lowering student-to-counselor ratios improves student outcomes and promotes counselor efficacy.■ When school and district leaders understand the scope of the counselor role, build strong relationships with counselors, and support their professional growth, counselors are better positioned to fulfill their jobs.	<ul style="list-style-type: none">■ Supplemental college access programs run by community organizations can actually increase inequities in access when they are not well integrated into school-based programs.■ Assigning counselors non-counseling tasks deprives students of critical counseling support.■ Simply hiring more counselors without clarifying their professional roles is insufficient.
