Google Security Operations Engineer (Beta) Sample Questions (Q47-Q52):

NEW QUESTION # 47

You scheduled a Google Security Operations (SecOps) report to export results to a BigQuery dataset in your Google Cloud project. The report executes successfully in Google SecOps, but no data appears in the dataset. You confirmed that the dataset exists. How should you address this export failure?

- A. Grant the Google SecOps service account the roles/bigquery.dataEditor IAM role on the dataset.
- B. Set a retention period for the BigQuery export.
- C. Grant the Google SecOps service account the roles/iam.serviceAccountUser IAM role to itself.
- D. Grant the user account that scheduled the report the roles/bigquery.dataEditor IAM role on the project.

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION # 48

You need to ingest audit logs from your organization's entire Google Cloud environment into Google Security Operations (SecOps). This process must include Cloud NAT logs for workloads within a designated folder. You need to configure this ingestion while minimizing integration complexity. You have already enabled Google Cloud data ingestion into Google SecOps. What should you do next?

- A. Configure an aggregated log sink at the organization level, and route the Cloud NAT logs to a Cloud Storage bucket. Configure the Cloud Storage connector for Google SecOps.
- B. Create a custom filter to export the project-level Cloud NAT logs for each project in the environment folder.
- C. Create a custom filter to export the folder-level Cloud NAT logs.
- D. Configure an aggregated log sink at the folder level, and route the Cloud NAT logs to Pub/Sub. Enable the Pub/Sub connector for Google SecOps.

Answer: D

NEW QUESTION # 49

You are conducting a proactive threat hunt in Google Security Operations (SecOps). You observe multiple login events with the same principal.user.userid field that originate from different countries within a short time window. You need to validate whether the account has been compromised. What should you do?

- A. Run a YARA-L retrohunt rule that detects users who are logging in from multiple regions using multiple entity contexts.
- B. Use the entity graph to correlate the user's risk score with linked assets, and review any active alerts.
- C. Perform a UDM search for login events, and pivot to group results by user and country of origin.
- D. Perform a YARA-L 2.0 search for login events and their associated principal.location.country field. Use an outcome field to aggregate the number of failed logins.

Answer: C

NEW QUESTION # 50

You are ingesting and parsing logs from an SSO provider and an on-premises appliance using Google Security Operations (SecOps). Users are tagged as "restricted" by an internal process. Restrictions last five days from the most recent flagging time. You need to create a rule to detect when restricted users log into the appliance. Your solution must be quickly implemented and easily maintained. What should you do?

- A. Store the identifiers of the flagged users in the detection rule logic. Actively monitor for newly flagged users, and add them to the detection rule logic.
- B. Use a Google SecOps SOAR global context value to store a list of flagged users with their corresponding time to live values. Use a SOAR job to dynamically build and deploy a new version of the detection rule with the updated list of flagged users.
- C. Store the flagged users in a data table column with their corresponding time to live values in a second column. Use row-based comparisons in your detection rule.
- D. Ingest the user flags as custom enrichment data using a feed. Use a multi-event detection rule to find logins from users flagged in the entity graph.

Answer: D

NEW QUESTION # 51

You are a security analyst at an organization that uses Google Security Operations (SecOps).

You notice suspicious login attempts on several user accounts. You need to determine whether these attempts are part of a coordinated attack as quickly as possible. What action should you take first?

- A. Use UDM Search to query historical logs for recent IOCS associated with the suspicious login attempts.
- B. Remove user accounts that have repeated invalid login attempts.
- C. Look for correlations across impacted users in the Risk Analytics dashboard.
- D. Enable default curated detections to automatically block suspicious IP addresses.

Answer: C
